FIGHTING NOW TO SAVE SWIG

Motion Offered to Punish Mock and Leonard for Making Disclosures—Luce Argues in Behalf of Swig.

Representative Coyle of Boston, in the course of the debate on the censure of Representative Simon Swig, in the House of Representatives, moved an amendment that Representatives Mock and Leonard also be censured.

This, if passed, would punish every member who made public any definite evidence regarding the bribery scandals.

The battle in the House of Representatives over the acceptance of the Committee on Rules's report was reopened at the beginning of to-day's session, when the members began the consideration of the recommendation that Representative Simon Swig be censured for having told members and reporters that an attempt was made to bribe him, and for later having denied on the floor of the House and under oath that he had ever made such statements.

To his rescue came many members of the House. The fight for him was led by Representative Robert Luce.

"The speaker's cabinet," said Mr. Luce, "leading members of the House, men trained in the law, assisted by a lawyer, conducted the investigation. They on one hand and this Jew on the other, and the cross-examination of the courts used to break this man down. Is it any wonder that Swig should contradict himself?"

Representative Walker, who led the fight against Swig, contended that it was not for contradicting himself that Swig should be censured, but for having told stories of bribery and then under oath denied them.

DEMAND FOR PUBLICITY.

There was a strong probability that before the close of the debate a resolution might be introduced asking that ALL the evidence before the committee, which the House leaders have thus far kept from the general public, be published as a House document.

Before the discussion on Swig's case began a resolution was passed authorizing the committee on pay roll to draw up the pay roll for the compensation of members. It was decided to include the pay of John Tarr, who, after pleading guilty to forgery, resigned a few days ago, and Frank J. Gethro, who was expelled yesterday, until the end of the session, the amount involved in either case being but a few dollars.

Representative Walker, in opening the debate on the Swig censure, said he would call attention in the evidence to statements made by members, and statements made by Mr. Swig, which he declared were not made "in the excitement of cross-examination."

"They were made deliberately," he said, "and they contradict the statements of other members of this House.

"The committee has no feeling against any man. We heard all this evidence and determined that without fear or favor prejudice to any man in this House. Having found the facts, we decided what we would recommend on these facts. We have decided the case of Mr. Gethro. I will now explain the committee's attitude on Mr. Swig.

"To Representative Jabez P. Thompson, as the evidence will show, Mr. Swig made this statement, 'I was offered $100 for my vote.' In other words, Mr. Swig went to a member of this House and said that some one had attempted to bribe him. Possibly Mr. Swig did not realize the seriousness of the statement. No one who heard Mr. Thompson could doubt that that statement was made to him. That statement was made voluntarily by Mr. Swig. If it was not true it ought not to have been made.

"WAS OFFERED STOCK."

"Lorraine P. Covington, one of the State House reporters, testified before your committee that Mr. Swig told him that he was offered $100, that the offer came through members of the House, and that he could prove it. Your committee had to take that statement of Mr. Covington in connection with the statement of Mr. Thompson. In both cases Mr. Swig said he was offered $100.

"Charles O. Power, the State House representative of the BOSTON AMERICAN, testified that Mr. Swig told him that he was offered money for his vote. That was the direct testimony of Mr. Power. Now, Mr. Speaker, your committee might overlook the fact that Mr. Swig denied the statement to Mr. Power that he was offered money, it might overlook the fact that Mr. Swig denied the statements of Mr. Thompson and Mr. Covington; but taking the three together, your committee was satisfied that Mr. Swig had made these statements. This was a serious matter for any man to make such a statement.

"Mr. Swig, so far as we know, never offered any money to affect legislation. I believe Mr. Swig is an honest man. It is a light crime that we are dealing with now compared with the one dealt with yesterday. Let us be perfectly fair in the matter.

"I next want to call your attention to the statement made to the House publicly by Mr. Swig. Mr. Swig read this statement. It was carefully prepared by him. It was not made in cross-examination, it was not made to a newspaper reporter. It was deliberate and carefully prepared and read by him before the House. In that statement he said:

DENIAL MADE BY SWIG.

"Inasmuch as some Boston newspapers have credited me with interviews which I never gave, and have made statements that I never made, I desire before this House to say that I did not at any time say a member of this House offered me $100 or otherwise improperly approached me. Neither have I been so approached by a member of this House in any improper way."

"Mr. Swig further says in that statement, 'And I would further say that no person has ever offered me money for my vote since I have been a member of the Massachusetts Legislature.'

"Now I wish to call attention to Mr. Swig's testimony. I have been through that testimony carefully, and in my statements I will try to be absolutely fair to Mr. Swig.

"His statements were conflicting in some parts, but I believe that this story Mr. Swig stands behind to-day. And this is the story of Mr. Swig:

"Mr. Swig testified that a person approached him, asked him to vote against the bucket-shop bill and said that he would make it right with him; that the man represented himself to Mr. Swig as one connected with the bucket shops.

"In other words, a man approached him and attempted to brib Mr. Swig, according to his own testimony. Mr. Swig said before that nobody had offered him money. In his testimony he said, 'The man might have meant money. He meant something of value.' And still Mr. Swig said to this House, 'No person has offered me money for my vote since I have been a member of the Legislature.'

MELLEN WOULD HALE GAS BOARD TO HOUSE BAR

ORDER CALLING FOR THE COST OF ELECTRIC LIGHTING AND PLANT IGNORED.

Representative Mellen of Worcester in the House to-day asked if the gas and electric light commissioners had replied to the order adopted in which they were asked to furnish information regarding the cost of producing electricity by the Edison company and how much it would cost to duplicate their plant. The speaker said that no response had been received.

"I shall take the first opportunity," said Mr. Mellen, "to see whether or not I can bring the commissioners before the bar of the House for this neglect."

The order was passed nearly three months ago. It contained ten questions relative to the cost of making electricity, and the commissioners were directed to ascertain the answers to them and report to the House.

"BRIBERY CHARGES ARE TRUE"---MOCK

A remarkable feature of yesterday's hearing on the expulsion of Frank J. Gethro before the House of Representatives was the open threat to censure Representative Jacob H. Mock for his statements before the Committee on Rules.

This has brought out the fact that Representative Mock, in his evidence before the committee, made highly sensational statements which have not heretofore appeared in any newspaper. Mr. Mock said that he believed that from fifty to seventy members of the House were bought against the anti-bucket shop bill, and that the statements of Lawson and Raymond were in effect true. He gave as his reason for believing this his own experience with the House, and a scathing cross-examination, in which all the lawyers of the committee went at him as though he were the culprit, instead of the witness, could not break down his testimony.

Significant passages from the testimony of Representative Mock follow:

Q.—Do you think, Mr. Mock, that Mr. Gethro speaking to you as you have testified that he did is sufficient evidence for you to state, as Mr. Lawson has stated, that seventy members of this Legislature can be bribed? A.—I cannot say about the seventy. I was told that fifty—and my experience, as I say, makes me believe that what he has said is true.

Q.—That fifty members can be bribed? A.—No; my experience makes me believe what he says is pretty near true.

Q.—Now, tell me what he said. A.—He simply said that so much money came up here, and there were so many who were going to vote against the bucket shop bill, is the way I take it.

Q.—How many members? A.—My experience with the members of the House has been that I cannot say a word against any of them.

Q.—Do you believe that corruption generally exists in this Legislature? A.—I never thought that it did until fifteen minutes past 11, May 3—a memorable day to me.

Q.—Does that one instance justify you in making the statement that the Legislature is corrupt, is a corrupt body, and the statements of Mr. Lawson are correct? A.—I do not mean to say anything else, because I don't know anything about it, but I do on the bucket shop bill—I mean what he said on the bucket shop bill—my experience makes me believe he is correct.

Q.—(By Representative Hayes)—What other members of the other sixty-nine have you ever found that were corrupt? A.—I have not——

Q.—You say in your communication you believe what Mr. Lawson has said in his circular that seventy members are corrupt. Now, you come before this committee and say you believe what he says is true. I think you ought to inform the committee who the other sixty-nine are? A.—I say my experience makes me believe it.

Q.—You say sixty-nine more are corrupt? A.—No, I don't say that.

"WILL BE $50 IN IT."

Q (by Representative Turtle)—What statement of Mr. Lawson, that by reason of your finding one man who says "There will be $50 in it," leads you to believe the statement of Lawson? A.—I believe I would have been one of the last men who would have asked, and therefore I think if there is anything like this, that he would have gone to his confidants——

Q.—What makes you think, Mr. Mock,

Chauffeur Shot, Brother Says, Because of

RICH WIDOW'S LOVE

"My Brother Spoke of Marrying Mrs. Sutton," Declares Howard Stafford.

That Reginald Stafford, the young chauffeur killed nearly two weeks ago at the home of Mrs. Eben Sutton in North Andover, and Mrs. Sutton herself, the millionaire widow and proprietor of the rich estate, were sweethearts, despite her age and his few years, and that he had spoken of marrying her, is the sensational statement of the dead man's brother, Howard Stafford of New York, to the BOSTON AMERICAN.

From the same source comes the statement that Edward Ruby, Mrs. Sutton's butler, who shot Stafford, was jealous of the position Stafford occupied in the affections of the rich widow. Ruby, it is declared, had worked hard to become favored by Mrs. Sutton, and was greatly angered when the young chauffeur came between them. That he had threatened to shoot Stafford is the belief of the dead man's brother.

STAFFORD FEARED RUBY.

Last night Howard Stafford, from his home in New York, at No. 2,364 Eighth avenue, told a reporter for the BOSTON AMERICAN that a few days before Reginold left his home for North Andover, to handle Mrs. Sutton's automobile, he talked of buying a revolver.

"He told mother that he would need a gun at North Andover because he feared Ruby, the butler, would try to kill him at any time if he found a good chance," declared the brother.

"Mother talked with Reginald and finally he decided that he would not buy a revolver. The belief that Ruby would try to kill him was uppermost in his mind, however, when he went away. He said that he would meet the butler man to man if he had to.

SPOKE OF MARRYING.

"Jealousy," continued Howard Stafford, "was the motive for the crime. Reginald came between the butler and Mrs. Sutton. Reginald had spoken of marrying the rich old lady.

"It is a fact, which we know well here at home, that the relations between Reginald and John H. Scoville, the son-in-law of Mrs. Sutton, were not of the pleasantest.

"Only a month ago Mr. Scoville discharged Reginald from his position as chauffeur, for what reasons we can only guess. But Mrs. Sutton promptly reinstated him and personally placed him under her own orders and in her own house.

"The inquest, which has been ordered, should lay bare all the facts in this mystery. At a judicial inquest all the relations of the widow, the butler, chauffeur and family, will be brought to light.

SAYS RUBY WAS GUNNING.

"We can get the evidence then if Superintendent Kyle and the workmen about Hill Crest, and Mrs. Sutton herself, tell what they know. O. Cook, the carpenter, who says that Reginald left Hill Crest at one time last year, just two hours to the good, and

GOVERNMENT TO DRAG STANDARD OIL TO COURT

ATTORNEY-GENERAL MOODY TO ISSUE STATEMENT TO-DAY REGARDING PROSECUTION.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—Attorney General Moody, just before the cabinet meeting to-day, announced that he would make a formal statement later in the day regarding the proposed prosecution of the Standard Oil Company.

Mr. Moody, acting for the President, is preparing to drag the Standard Oil Company into court for violation of the Sherman anti-trust and the Elkins anti-rebate laws.

The contemplated action is said to be the result of the midnight Cabinet of Wednesday, in which the Attorney-General, Secretaries Taft, Root and Bonaparte, and Postmaster-General Cortelyou participated.

It is known that secret agents of the Department of Justice and the Bureau of Corporations have been engaged in collecting evidence against the Rockefeller octopus for several months, and it is understood that both the Attorney General and the President believe that an absolutely conclusive case has been made against the corporation.

It is likely that prosecutions will also be begun against the railroads that have been favoring the Standard Oil Company to the prejudice of independent concerns, by granting rebates and other preferences, as revealed in the report of Commissioner of Corporations Garfield.

The administrations's purpose in going after the Standard at this time is said to be due to recent efforts made by the oil-railroad crowd to put spikes in the railroad rate bill.

2 HURT IN 4-STORY FALL OF FREIGHT LIFT

HEAVY ELEVATOR CRASHES TO BASEMENT, MEN CRUSHED BY ROLLS OF PAPER.

Two men were seriously hurt to-day by the falling of a freight elevator of the Cook-Vivian Paper Company at Nos. 187-189 Congress street. The elevator dropped four stories and the men were crushed beneath heavy rolls of paper.

The injured men are:

Brennan, John, of Charlestown, both legs broken, hurt internally; taken to Relief Station.

Sheridan, Thomas, of South Boston, badly crushed.

The two men had loaded the elevator and had reached the third floor when something gave way, and the elevator with its great burden crashed down into the cellar, a distance of perhaps fifty feet.

The two men were thrown to the floor of the enclosure and the heavy rolls of paper were thrown upon them. It was thought at first that they had both been killed.

The excitement that arose from the accident soon spread through the large building and reached the street. In a few minutes a crowd collected numbering several hundred. Policemen were hurried to the scene and a call was sent for an ambulance.

The men had been pinned down by the freight. They were extricated and examined by the ambulance doctor. Brennan was hurried to the hospital, but it was some time before Sheridan could be moved.

When Sheridan reached the hospital and an examination was made of him, the doctors said that they thought he as well as Brennan would recover.

An examination to ascertain the cause of the accident was begun.

CORRUPTION IN LEGISLATURE.

Q.—He might go to others first, but what makes you think he would have had any more success with those with whom he was acquainted? A.—I don't know how to answer that.

Q.—So all you know about the corruption in the Legislature is that one member of the Legislature said, "If you will vote for a certain measure there will be $50 in it?" A.—That is the only experience that I have had in all my five months that I have been up here.

Q.—In your interview with the paper did you say that was the only reason you had for the prior statement that the statements of Mr. Lawson about the Legislature were true? A.—Well, I simply said that I believed, since the beginning of this inquiry, that it should be in the open, and my experience—I criticised the committee, of course—and that my experience at a quarter past 11 on May 3 made me believe that what these men were saying about that particular bill was so.

Q.—What was it that they said about that particular bill that you concluded was true, just because one member of the Legislature approached you, as you say this member did? A.—What made me believe——

Invited to Be One of "50."

Q.—No, what statements were there that made you believe it was true? I don't quite get what you mean is true, when you say your only experience is as you have said. What statements were made by anybody that you believed to be true, and on what do you base your belief?

A.—I told you my experience made me believe about what he said about $70,000 coming up here. When he said that he knew what he was talking about, my experience—this man telling me that they were going to have fifty men, and I was invited to become one of the fifty for a consideration of $50.

Q.—What did you think they were going to do with the rest of the $70,000? A.—He didn't tell me anything about the amount of money they were going to have, this man didn't.

Q.—I thought you said you thought he knew what he was talking about? A.—Tom Lawson.

Q.—Where do you think he gets his information that $70,000 was coming up here? A.—I don't know; Mr. Lawson very seldom says anything that he cannot really back up, in my opinion.

LAWSON NOT ALONE.

Q.—Now, what makes you think that? A.—He is not alone. John B. Moran seems to have been satisfied that there was something wrong, and Mr. Raymond has made statements, and my experience makes me believe there must be something. Perhaps I am wrong; perhaps I am the only man up here who thinks that way. I feel this way: Any man who comes up and makes an offer to me thinks I am a crook like himself. I tell you, gentlemen, I came up here an honest man, and I want to say I am an honest man now, and I would like to tell you here the truth, and nothing but the truth, and if I am the only man——

* * * * * *

Q.—Mr. Mock, you state in your interview, which you tell this committee is substantially correct, that the opinions of Mr. Lawson and Mr. Moran are correct? A.—I don't know whether they are correct; I believe what they say is true, not from personal knowledge, only what happened to me.

Q.—Their statements have gone broadcast over the country now; yours have gone broadcast over the country, your verification of theirs. Now, we want to know what is the basis of your statement that seventy members are corrupt? A.—I don't say seventy members, I simply believe what these men say.

Q.—And they said seventy? A.—They said seventy. This man said they were going to get fifty.

Q.—Do you believe that that man's statement was correct, that they were going to get fifty members of the Legislature, at $50 a head? A.—I had no reason to either believe it or doubt it.

"I COULD NOT BE BOUGHT."

Q.—You could not be bought for $50. A.—You could not buy me for that amount, or anybody else.

Q.—Do you believe there are fifty men in this Legislature worse than you in this respect? A.—I have no reason to believe other than that the majority of the men and all the members I have had anything to do with in the House, that they are not probably as good as I am, and I want to say this: I will put my reputation for veracity and truthfulness against any member's in this House.

Q.—Admitting that to be true, do you believe there are fifty men in this Legislature in that respect who are worse than yourself? A.—I don't say there are fifty who would have accepted it. There may have been fifty who have been offered it.

"NOTORIOUS LEGISLATURE."

Q.—Do you believe, Mr. Mock, if seventy members could be bought, that this Legislature is the worst set of skates we have had up here in years? A.—No, sir; but I believe if there are seventy who can be influenced by so-called money, that the other hundred and seventy should not be branded as they are for we will all have the name of being members of this notorious 1906 Legislature. I am in favor this thing should go to the bottom, and I want everybody to understand my experience here, as I said on that memorable morning, as the only basis I have and the only reason why I believe that what these men have said in regard to the bucket shop bill is true; and they will tell the same as I am telling; perhaps we will get to the bottom of the thing.

Q. (by Representative Ames)—In reply to a question why you believed fifty members could be bribed you said Mr. Gethro said so. I want to ask you did you believe the statements of one whom you have characterized as a briber on a matter that entirely contravened your own stated experience prior to that time? A.—If you will just give that again.

Q.—You have stated up to that time you had no reason to suspect any one. A.—No, I had no reason to suspect any one.

Q.—In reply to the question why you believed fifty members could be bribed, you replied that Gethro stated to you that he was to get fifty members. A.—Excuse me, he didn't say he was getting fifty members, he said they are going to get fifty members.

"I BELIEVED IT."

Q.—That statement you believed? A.—Well, he made the statement.

Q.—And you believed it? Well, I have no knowledge of any kind why I should believe, or why I should not believe it, but I believed it, as it was given.

Q.—Your experience told you not to believe it, did you believe that against your experience? A.—My experience, of course, was that I should not believe it, but I believed it.

Q.—Then you do believe that fifty men can be bought of this Legislature? A.—I have no knowledge of that fact, only as I say, my experience.

Gethro's Plea for Justice.

"I stand before you," he said, "a man accused of disloyalty to my constituency, accused of the crime, the heinousness of which I now recognize, the crime of the betrayal of the interests of the people confided to me. You are my comrades and associated in the important and essential business of legislation for the people. But you have another relation to me. It is that of brotherhood and fellowship as man to man. I know you all. You know me. I demand at your hands justice. If justice means that you should condemn me, I am content with your verdict. I ask you to be fair with me. I have been attacked in the press of Boston. It has been said that I was indicted by a Grand Jury of Suffolk County, and this very House has been charged with using its influence to secure a reconsideration of that vote with the purpose of exonerating me. I am now addressing you, my fellow-members. I am charged with the crime of attempting to bribe you. I ought not to fear the outcome. I do not fear it. If there are any men in this House who agreed to be bribed by me, they know it, as I know it. I ask them here and now to rise in their places and denounce me. We are here under a solemn covenant to the people who sent us to represent them. I may have been true to my covenant or false—I do not argue it now.

"One thing I ask. Be level. Be square. Do not play the part of the Pharisee or the hypocrite. Vote me out of the House because of facts proven, not facts reported by an unfair committee. Damn me for all time, if you will, but let your verdict be based on conscience and duty. I hope and I want to hope to go on record that when the roll is called, among those who vote to ruin me by expulsion or suspension there will appear only the names of men of blameless life and stainless devotion to the duty which devolves on each of us. I can only hope that on the roll of those opposed to me there will not appear the names of those who have taken bribes or have agreed to accept a bribe.

"The penalty of sin, if I have been sinful, I am prepared to undergo. But I am innocent or guilty. If innocent, I demand acquittal. If guilty, I desire and exact that the voices of the innocent, rather than the votes of the guilty, shall convict me.

"Let him who is without sin cast the first stone."—From Representative Gethro's appeal to the House yesterday.

GETHRO EXPELLED; PUNISH SWIG TO-DAY

With Frank J. Gethro expelled from membership by a vote of 142 to 54, after one of the most sensational sessions in the history of the Massachusetts Legislature, the House to-day takes up the second recommendation of the "bribe" inquiry committee—the censure of Representative Simon Swig of Taunton—for telling contradictory stories about an offer to buy his vote for the "bucket-shop" bill. A hard fight will be made in Swig's behalf, but the House leaders expect to carry the programme through by as large a vote as that in Gethro's case.

Having unseated Gethro without any further revelation as to the "block of fifty" votes, which it was claimed were "fixed" for the defeat of the "bucket shop" measure, the House managers are now somewhat concerned as to Gethro's further course. Will he make revelations which will bring into unenviable notice other members of the House? Can he throw any light on the personnel of the "block of fifty?" Thomas W. Lawson suggests that Gethro make a confidant of District Attorney John B. Moran, and many of Gethro's friends, who believe that he is being made a scapegoat, consider it his duty to give the prosecuting officer whatever incriminating facts he may possess.

All Eyes Now on Moran.

Needless to say Mr. Gethro will be called upon by the District Attorney in the investigation of State House corruption which the latter is determined to make, and future developments are awaited with interest by the members of the Great and General Court, as well as by the public at large.

"Aboard ship, the critical order is 'clear decks for action.' I think that was the order given at the State House this afternoon, at least that is the way I heard it," was the comment Thomas W. Lawson had to make on the expulsion of Gethro.

Speaker Cole closed the debate on the Gethro question after Mr. Leonard of Springfield has repeated the testimony he gave the rules committee and declared his conviction that Gethro was guilty. Representatives Mellen of Worcester and Lomasney of Boston engineered the fight for Gethro.

The speaker said:

"This is not a trial for bribery, it is not a trial for perjury, but only a trial as to whether this man is fit to retain his seat in this House. It is no easy task to ask you to send this man out in a measure disgraced, but if there is in him the stamina, which I believe he possesses, there is an opportunity for him to come back again to this legislative body, and there shall be no hand which shall be warmer than mine, and no eye shall be keener than mine in watching him walking in the paths of honor.

"Keep the Flag Spotless."

"The flag of Massachusetts has been spotless and white, but a blot has been placed upon it and it is the duty of every member to see that that blot is removed. I have no pride in sustaining the report of the committee, I have no pride in your sustaining your Speaker, but I have a pride in the whiteness of that flag, and it is that which I ask you to sustain."

The 54 members voting against expulsion were:

Barrett, Bassett, Bell, Brazzell, Buckley, Butler, Callahan, Clark of Boston, Coffin, Conley, Conway of twenty-third Suffolk, Coyle, Creed, Daly, Doogue, Douglass, Downey, Driscoll of Boston, Driscoll of Chelsea, Egan, Elwell, Fitzgerald, Gatineau, Gaylord, Glynn, Grady, Graham, Hancock, Jaques, Johnson, Jones of Stoneham, Jones of Chelsea, Kelleher, Lamoureaux, Lomasney, Lynch, McDermott, J. M. McDonald, McKirdy, McManmon, McNerney, Mellen, Mitchell, Murphy, Newton, O'Rourke, Power, Quinlan, Sherburne, Sherman, Sullivan of Boston, Toland, Wooden.

Gethro interrupted the roll call to ask to be excused from voting, and before the result was announced walked out of the House with white, set face and trembling lips.

HELD IN $2000; THEFT CHARGED

In the Malden District Court to-day John White of Chelsea was held in $2,000 bond for further hearing on June 25 on the charge of highway robbery. He is accused of holding up Frank Pliestein of No. 420 Grove street, Melrose, at the point of a revolver on the evening of June 17 and rifling his pockets of $5.

A confederate is alleged to have operated with him by the name of Robert Seelee, also of Chelsea, who was yesterday bound over for hearing on the same day.

THIEVES TAKE CASH, CIGARS AND LIQUORS

Desiring to drink and smoke without cost to themselves, thieves entered the liquor store of Gallagher Brothers, No. 1,140 Washington street, early to-day. They carried off a large assortment of bottled goods, cigars and $15 in cash.

HAAKON VII. IS CROWNED KING OF NORSEMEN

Takes Throne With Queen Maud and Swears Fealty to New Monarchy.

TRONDHJEM, Norway, June 22.—King Haakon VII. was formally crowned King of Norway to-day in the Trondhjem cathedral. The ceremony was one of great historic interest, as Haakon is the first ruler Norway has had to itself for nearly 600 years. Everything was carried out with simplicity, resembling more closely the inauguration of an American President than a royal pageant.

Several delegations from the United States attended the ceremony, as official representatives of Norwegians in America. The principal delegation was from Chicago and numbered six: Dr. Gale, the Norwegian consul at Chicago, Dr. Daae, Mr. Stenland, Dr. Quale, Mr. Ray and Mr. Opstad. All the countries with which Norway has initiated diplomatic relations sent special delegations to the coronation. About eighty members of the various European royal houses attended the ceremony as well.

Bryan Was There.

The United States was represented by Mr. Graves, the United States Minister to Stockholm. Among the other Americans present were Mr. and Mrs. William Jennings Bryan and Mrs. Marshall Field.

Of all the European countries to which invitations were extended to send delegates to the coronation, Sweden alone refused to accept. The Swedish Government informed the authorities at Christiania that its action must not be taken as in any way unfriendly to the new kingdom, but was dictated solely by the personal desire of King Oscar not to give his sanction to the coronation of his successor.

Passive opposition to the coronation today was made by many republicans and Social Democrats, who were in favor of the establishment of a republic at the time of the separation from Sweden, and who object to being ruled by a king. About one-third of the members of the town council of Trondhjem are anti-monarchists, and they declined to have anything to do with to-day's ceremony.

Church Greets King.

Awaiting the King and Queen at the church entrance were Bishop Bang of Christiania, Bishop Eriesen of Bergen, acjem and Bishop Eriesen of Bergen, accompanied by fifty white-robed ministers. Bishop Wexelsen greeted the monarchs, saying: "God bless the entrance and exit of your majesties now and forever."

After a coronation sermon by Bishop Bang from Joel, 2, ii, and the singing of several Norwegian hymns by the choir and congregation, King Haakon, accompanied by his aides and preceded by the chief chamberlain and a standard bearer who carried the state flag, walked to the altar, where Bishop Wexelsen annointed him on the forehead and wrist.

A special prayer was said in connection with the presentation of each symbol to Haakon. The coronation of Queen Maud was then carried out with the same ceremony, with the exception of presenting a state sword to her.

Throughout the ceremony Queen Maud appeared frightened. She did not join in the singing, as did King Haakon. While the service was in progress she was very pale and she was exceedingly tired at its conclusion.

ELEVATOR KILLS BANKER.

NEW YORK, June 22.—William Brock, Shoemaker, of No. 16 West Fifty-fifth street, a member of the banking firm of Shoemaker & Bates, of No. 24 Broad street, died last night in the Hudson street hospital from injuries received in an elevator.

ELECTRICITY

There's no trouble about it—only an increase of comfort follows installation of the Electric Fan. It's usable wherever the Electric Light has been introduced.

Have you learned to be light-wise?

MAYOR SAYS PAUPER DOCTOR NOT IN OFFICE

Will Probe Appointment of Man Said to Be Unregistered Physician.

Is there a resident physician at Long Island almshouse and hospital?

Mayor Fitzgerald declares that he has signed no appointment for the acting physician, Nathaniel P. Thayer, and that he would have to do so before Mr. Thayer would be in office. At the office of the pauper institutions it is said that Thayer succeeded Dr. Simon P. Cox, who retired from the service of the city June 15.

W. Prentiss Parker, chairman of the board of pauper trustees, when asked to give his version of the controversy, declined to talk in any way regarding the resolution adopted by the Common Council last night, setting forth that Mr. Thayer was not a registered physician and was wrongfully appointed to the position of resident physician at the Island, and would not even say whether the appointment of Mr. Thayer had been made.

The clerk at the office of the Board of Trustees was reticent, but admitted that Mr. Thayer had filled the position of resident physician since Dr. Cox went out on June 15.

Mayor Fitzgerald, when asked if it was true that a man not a physician was in charge of the poor of the city at Long Island and was the physician there, said:

"I have signed no appointment of Mr. Thayer as resident physician, and as I understand that I should have to do so, I do not consider that Thayer is in office. I do understand that Mr. Thayer was selected by the Board of Trustees, but the appointment has never come to me for my approval and I shall not approve it. I am going to look into the matter to-day; in fact, have already begun to investigate. I may have something to say later."

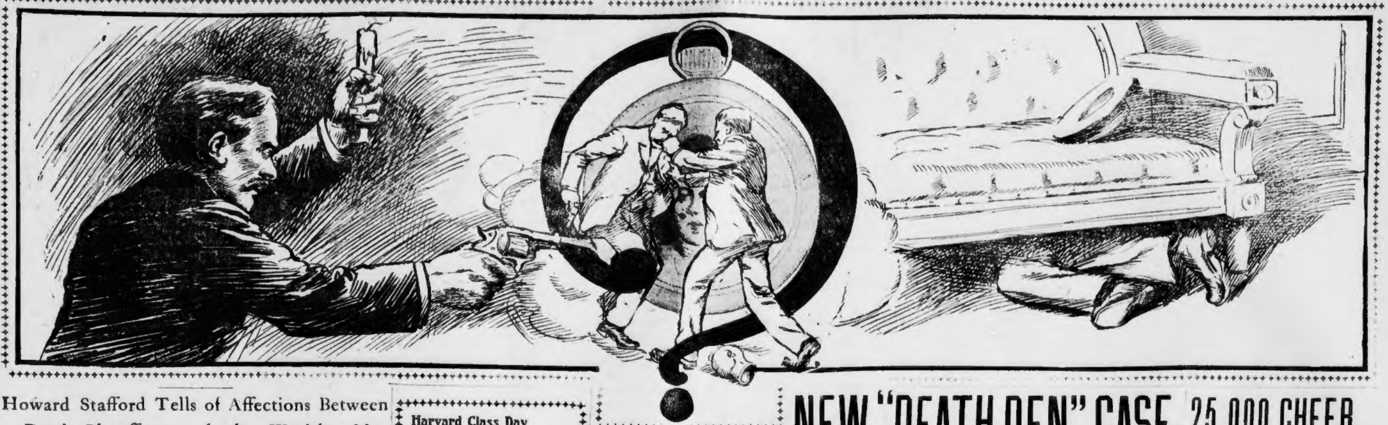
RUBY HAD SWORN TO SHOOT STAFFORD DECLARES BROTHER

WAS STAFFORD A THIEF, OR WAS THERE MURDER OVER A RICH WIDOW'S AFFECTIONS?



Howard Stafford Tells of Affections Between Dead Chauffeur and the Wealthy Mrs. Sutton and Speaks of an Intended Marriage who says Ruby told him he was gunning for him and intended to 'do' him, can tell what he knows about that."

The inquest which District Attorney Peters has ordered to be held in Lawrence, to investigate the shooting of Stafford, will be called as soon as the evidence now being gathered by the State police is well in hand. All that is known thus far is mysterious. Ruby declares he found Stafford behind a sofa in the drawing room and shot him, killing him almost instantly. He says he thought Stafford was a burglar after the gold and silver plate in the dining room, valued at $10,000.

POLICE SEE A MYSTERY.

Ruby was taken before Judge Frye, and was discharged, as "doing what a good servant ought to do under the circumstances." This did not satisfy the relatives of the dead man, and neither did it satisfy the police. Chief Mizen took up a line of investigation which brought out several things not mentioned at the trial, and which pointed to a mystery which led some to think murder had been done.

It was found that the man had not been killed behind a sofa. Blood marks on the floor in the middle of the room and on a chair, an overturned small table and broken vase, and the disarrangement of rugs in the drawing room pointed to a struggle between two people.

Ruby said Stafford must have entered by a window-door in the room, which was open, but there were no keys found on Stafford which would fit the Yale lock. The police believe that if Stafford came in, someone with authority must have opened the door for him.

MAN'S SHOES MISSING.

The whereabouts of the dead man's shoes, which were found on the piazza, is also a mystery. Chief Mizen had these shoes, but now he cannot find them, and believes that someone has taken them. The shoes were perfectly dry when found and Stafford was in his stocking feet. But that night, while Stafford was in the house, rain was falling heavily, and the police declare that if Stafford had been out his shoes would have been soaked.

The police have in their possession the gold watch worn by Stafford, in the back of which was a small photograph of Mrs. Sutton, taken when she was a young woman of twenty-five and handsome. This is believed to be the strongest token that a secret friendship existed between the rich woman and her dead chauffeur, which is as strong as any that has been openly hinted at.

The coming inquest will not be held before Trial Justice Frye, who discharged Ruby. It may not be held in Lawrence, but probably will. District-Attorney Peters can designate any judge he may select to conduct the inquest.

POLICE ARE STILL BUSY.

Meanwhile State Detective Wells of the State Police is busy on the case. What he has discovered in the mystery he will not state. But the decision of Mr. Peters to hold an inquest is practically an admission that some damaging or at least suspicious facts have been unearthed, and that the hurried hearing before Judge Frye did not by any means solve the mystery surrounding the shooting at the Sutton mansion.

The State will have difficulty in securing some of its witnesses. Ruby, the butler, who did the shooting, is probably in Europe by this time, and all the servants at the mansion have left.

Howard Stafford and the mother of the dead chauffeur will be at the inquest, and it is believed their testimony will throw considerable light upon the relations existing between Mrs. Sutton and Stafford, and also concerning Ruby.

SUMMER COOKING.

A coal or wood fire is doubly troublesome in summer-time, not only because of the extreme heat, but also because of the extra work—kindling to chop, wood or coal to carry and ashes to empty out.

The Summer cooking problem is effectually solved by the Florence Automatic Oil Stove, made by the Central Oil and Gas Stove Company of Gardner, Mass. This oil stove is made in several sizes, and will do any kind of cooking that can be done on any kind of a stove. It is less troublesome than any other kind of stove made—it burns ordinary kerosene oil, and is, consequently, the most economical of all stoves. All you have to do is to turn a lever, light a match and you have the hottest kind of a blue flame, with all the heat concentrated directly in the cooking, so that you can fry, boil, bake, stew, broil or iron on the hottest day in perfect comfort. It is always ready when needed most.

For Summer cooking, either for home, for the Summer cottage, or for camping, the Florence Automatic is far and away the best stove ever devised. It means cool cooking—cool, healthy, happy wives and cooks. You can find out all about Florence Automatic Oil Stoves by writing for illustrated descriptive catalogue, or by calling at 17 Washington street, Boston, and seeing the daily demonstrations of cooking.

NEW "DEATH DEN" CASE; DR. SINCLAIR ON TRIAL

Trial of another "Death Den" case, resulting from the pitiful tragedy of a refined and well educated girl at the hands, it is alleged, of a professional operator of illegal instruments, is now under way in the Superior Court, where Dr. John E. Sinclair of 161 West Springfield street is accused of causing the death of Miss Annie M. Russell of Charlestown.

Miss Russell was a stenographer in a business office on Summer street, and it is alleged that the illegal operation was performed upon her at the doctor's office on February 4, and that she was later removed to his house, 63 Blue Hill avenue. She was later removed to the Relief Hospital, where she died.

Mabel Childs, the most important witness in the case, cannot be located. She has evaded all efforts of the court officials to find her since Miss Russell's death. Miss Childs was the dead girl's closest friend and was with her, it is charged, when the alleged operation was performed.

The prosecution received a setback at the outset of the trial through the refusal of Judge Aiken to admit as evidence statements which Miss Russell is declared to have made to Dr. Thomas F. Leen, who attended her, on the ground that the girl was not in fear of death when she made the statements. Counsel for the government argued that the statutes permitted such evidence, but counsel for the defense replied that they did in civil cases only. The Court upheld this contention. Statements of a deceased person are not admissable excepting what are known as "dying declarations," and sometimes these are barred. Whatever Miss Russell had told Dr. Deen had not been told when she was in fear of death.

The Court's ruling may also mean the exclusion of the testimony of the nurse who attended Miss Russell at the hospital. However, Judge Aiken said the prosecution might produce authorities, and possibly induce a change of ruling later on.

Dr. William Putnam and Dr. Leen were the only witnesses at the first day of the trial. Both said that they attended the girl and found her in a very serious condition as the result, they believed, of an illegal operation.

CREATOR OF BUSTER TALKS OF MARY JANE

She Is His Own Daughter and He Says He'll Make Her Most Famous Girl in World.

AND TIGE WAS HIS OWN DOG

To record fully and faithfully all the interesting things that Buster Brown's originator, R. F. Outcault, in the quiet of his room at the Hotel Touraine, said to the writer between midnight and 2 a. m. to-day, would keep a strong, able-bodied historian busy for a week.

Mr. Outcault was resting up after the excitement incidental to a particularly strenuous day, in the course of which he had conceived, designed and finished a Buster Brown page for SUNDAY'S BOSTON AMERICAN, drawn a dozen Buster Brown pictures for Hearst syndicate stories, written another thrilling chapter of Buster Brown's autobiography, re-written an act of one of his Buster Brown plays and given two uproariously funny Buster Brown "picture talks" at Keith's.

Although he has climbed the ladder of fame high enough to make the average man dizzy, there's nothing haughty about Outcault. He continues to wear the same sized hat he wore years ago out in his native Ohio, when poor and without pull he pounded on the door of opportunity, looking for a job.

There's as wide a difference between the real Outcault and the popular conception of a successful comic artist as there is between a diamond and a brick.

In private life you'll find nothing boisterously gay about Buster Brown's progenitor—nothing of the professional jester.

Studies Child Nature.

On the other hand, you'll find a man of affairs whose thoughts are shaped in a serious mould—a forceful man, with a wide range of knowledge, a great adaptability to circumstances and delightfully broad view of men and things generally.

Outcault always digs into the depths and sees what lies at the root of things. Child nature is his favorite study, and in dealing with children he looks deeply into their little weaknesses and intricacies of character, rejoicing with them in their triumphs and bringing to their sorrows a tender consolation.

Few of the millions who week after week have been following the hair-lifting adventures of Buster Brown, Mary Jane and Tige are aware of the fact that the originator of the immortal trio was a pioneer of the New Thought movement and is a regular contributor to the official publications of that learned cult.

When you come to think of it, Buster Brown's good resolutions are just honeycombed with philosophy. One of them has been adopted by a flourishing metaphysical society as its slogan. Here it is just as Buster and Tige drew it up:

> Resolved, That we are willing to admit that most of our ills and troubles are imaginary. Now, instead of imagining that someone has wronged us or slighted us, let's forget it. We are each a ray of divine light. Let us try and shine, not through the green glass of envy and malice not through the blue glass of despair; but shine pure, with nothing between us and the source of our light. This is a very beautiful world. We positively refuse to be pessimists.

Is His Own Daughter.

In the course of breezy reminiscence of Buster Brown's genesis and vicissitudes, the artist told the writer that "Buster" was the pet name his parents used to call him when he was a child, and that at Lancaster, O., his home town, he is known by no other name to-day.

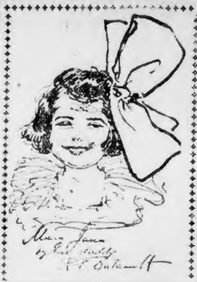
Mr. Outcault has a boy of his own. He is an adventurous youngster, too, and a fruitful source of inspiration to his father. But he is not the original of Buster Brown, as many misinformed persons suppose. Outcault, Jr., is fourteen years old and his Christian name is "Dick."

Tige was real enough in his day. The frolicsome dog you see in the Buster Brown pictures is a portrait of the Tige who was born and bred in Ohio and remained for years in the service of the Outcault family, faithful until death.

Dainty Mary Jane is a living reality. She is Outcault's only daughter.

"She's eight years old," said the artist. "Mary Jane is her real name and that is the name of her mother.

"And I'll make her the most famous girl in all the world before I'm through with her," added Outcault, with pardonable pride, as he drew the accompanying picture of the dark-haired little darling and signed the sketch, "By her daddy."



Artist Outcault's daughter, original of one of his famous child characters.

When the members of Engine 1 and Ladder 5 reached the scene Chauffeur Shea was quieting the women.

YOUNG WIDOW LOSES FORTUNE IN WILL FIGHT

Court Holds Mrs. Hoffman Obtained Aged Husband's Estate by "Undue Influence."

CHILDREN WIN IN SUIT

That Mrs. Effie Hoffman, the thirty year-old widow of Andrew Hoffman, aged seventy years, of East Boston, moulded by "undue influence" her husband's will, which left her his $50,000 estate, was the decision of the Supreme Court yesterday in the fight which the dead man's children by his first wife have for two years been waging on the validity of the will.

Hoffman died in 1903, leaving $50,000, all willed to his wife except $4,000, which was equally divided between Mrs. Nettie M. Durleck and Harris Hoffman, his children by his first wife, the contestants. The deceased married his second wife in 1899, when seventy-five years old. She was thirty, and they had been acquainted but a short time. His children were not informed of his marriage.

In summing up, the Court said:

"The testator was advanced in years when the will was executed, and was in feeble health, which rendered him an easy prey to one in marital relations with him. The marriage was, or might have been found to be, wholly mercenary on the part of the wife. The making of the will and the disposition of his estate were contrary to the intentions of the testator, as repeatedly expressed by him before his marriage. And the manner in which the estate was disposed of was, or might have been found to be, grossly unreasonable and unjust, and wholly regardless of the claims which his children had upon him."

FEAST OF BEAUTY AT HARVARD'S CLASS DAY

SENIORS IN CAP AND GOWN AND GIRLS IN SUMMER COSTUMES THRONG THE YARD.

Harvard Seniors are holding their Class Day to-day, with their parents, brothers, sisters and classmates' sisters as their guests for this most important day of their collegiate life.

The sun shines fair over Harvard's classic yard. The traditional caps and gowns of the seniors appear in bold relief against the light Summer toilettes of the matrons and the maids. Hundreds of pretty girls, in their most fetching frocks, are on every hand, proud of their collegiate friends and proud of their participation in Harvard's Class Day celebration.

After the long and varied program of yesterday, running from baseball game to the senior spread in Memorial Hall, the seniors and their friends were up bright and early, ready for the even more interesting program of to-day.

March to Chapel.

The Class Day exercises proper began at 9 o'clock with the morning prayer service in "Appleton Chapel," as the famous old chapel is fondly styled by the colegians. The service was conducted by the Rev. Francis G. Peabody and was attended by the seniors only.

At 9 o'clock the seniors, in cap and gown, met their class officers in front of Holworthy Hall and marched to the chapel. Conspicuous in the senior line were these class day officers: Chief Marshal Barton Kingman Stephenson, Second Marshal James Mortimer Montgomery, and Third Marshal John Donaldson Nichols. After chapel there was a period of leisure for the seniors till the beginning of the exercises in Sanders Theatre at 10:45 o'clock.

Clas Day Program.

Sanders Theatre was opened to ticket holders at 10:15 o'clock, and was closed to all but seniors at 10:55. At 10:45 the seniors again assembled in front of Holworthy, and, under guidance of their Class Day officers, marched to the theatre, where the following strictly Class Day program was in order:

Music. Prayer, Rev. Francis G. Peabody. Music. Oration, Arthur Campbell Blagden. Music. Poem, Julian Hinckley. Music. Ode, Henry Adams Bellows. Music.

ODE.

We have journeyed to thee from the ends of the earth,
Thou has brought the clear day
out of night,
With the strength of our fathers,
whose might was thy birth,
And whose faith is thy radiant light.
We reap where they sowed; their toil is our gain;
We rejoice through their hopes
and their fears;
We are strong in the sorrow of ages
of pain,
And the might of invincible years.

Now the morning leaps up from the rim of the world,
And we stand face to face with the day;
The brave banner of dawn through the sky is unfurled;—
We must go, for it calls us away.
The treasures that years have laid in our care
We may hold but to give them again;
Shall we fail, in the glory that thrills
through the air?
We are strong; let us rise and be men.

H. A. Bellows.

Singing of Ode to tune of "Fair Harvard." Benediction.

Musical program: March from "Aida," Verdi (as the class enters); overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; Chanson de Nuit, Elgar; legato, Strube; wedding procession from "Feramors," Rubinstein.

REPUBLICAN RESIGNS TO AID MR. HEARST

James A. Allen Leaves County Committee, Saying Trusts Control Party.

MANY TO FOLLOW HIM

NEW YORK, June 22.—"I consider it the duty of all citizens who are unselfishly laboring for the common good to use every honorable effort, regardless of past party affiliations, to make William Randolph Hearst Governor of New York. Mr. Hearst has a private fortune sufficient to make him independent of any outside influence which might be used against him. He has sufficient personal ability and strength of character, as shown by the management of his great newspaper properties, to manage the governmental affairs of this great State.

"We are passing through a great crisis—the greatest since the Civil War. And it behooves all patriotic citizens to grasp the opportunity which now presents itself to redeem the State and its good name by electing Mr. Hearst to the Governorship."

—(This is the declaration of former Assemblyman James A. Allen, after resigning from the Republican County Committee last night).

Allen's bolt means the disintegration of William Halpin's old ninth, now the new seventh, district organization as hundreds of young Republicans have promised to follow him into the Independence League camp. They agree with his open characterization on the floor last night, that "The clutches of monopoly and special privileges are so firmly fastened on the Republican party that I consider it the common enemy of the common people."

Allen's withdrawal from the county committee was a surprise to everybody. It was greeted with sneers by Quigg and other machine leaders, but provoked congratulations from scores of members who afterward crowded about and exclaimed: "Jim, we wish we could be with you, but that would mean ruin for us, and we dare not."

YACHT RUNS ASHORE.

The schooner-yacht Cosmopolitan went ashore on Devil's Back ledge in Broad Sound yesterday.

WOMAN UNDER SUMMONS IS STILL DEFIANT

Mrs. Dignan Continues Garbage Tour, Threatening Police With Her Heel.

STARTS BEFORE DAYLIGHT

"Had any policeman interfered with me this morning as I was collecting my garbage I would have used the heel of my shoe on him," snapped Mrs. Margaret Degnan of Dorchester to a reporter for the BOSTON AMERICAN.

Clad in her very best suit of clothes, Mrs. Degnan started long before daybreak on her garbage wagon through the principal streets of Dorchester. She awoke her hired man, Samuel Nicholson, at 3 o'clock and, despite the fact that both she and the man had been summoned to appear in court next Monday to explain how she collects garbage without a license, made her usual rounds with a defiant and triumphant expression on her face.

"I received my summons along with that for my hired man, Samuel Nicholson, when I arrived home last evening," she said. "I shall meet the police on their battleground next Monday in the Dorchester Court if nothing happens to prevent in the meantime."

With that defiance, her garbage collecting for the pigs at Dr. James L. Simons's stock farm at South Braintree at 9 o'clock completed, Mrs. Degnan departed for Dr. Simonds's down town town real estate office at Dover street and Shawmut avenue, where she manages interests aggregating $800,000.

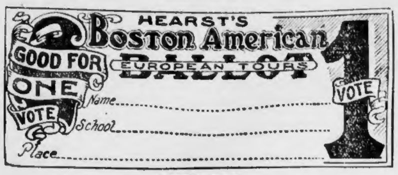
EUROPEAN TOUR ELECTION

ONLY FOUR DAYS MORE IN GREAT TOUR CONTEST



Name..........

School..........

Place..........

Only four days more of the great European Teachers' Tour Contest. Who will win the prizes of the forty free trips abroad will be determined by the totality of votes when the contest closes Monday night. It's surprising how the last days count.

Yesterday's records show some interesting results. And yet, with nearly every candidate in the Boston and Metropolitan District sending in Special Ballot orders and coupons it is surprising how few general changes have been made.

In fact, the only one to gain a position of more than two points is Miss Ellenette Pillsbury of the Adams School, East Boston, who comes up from the Shakespearian Tour to the European Tour, gaining four positions. The friends of Miss Pillsbury, who has been one of Boston's teachers for a great number of years, are showing their appreciation of her fine work and rewarding her with Special Ballot orders for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

Changes Recorded.

Miss Elizabeth Rogers of the Prescott School, Charlestown, and Miss Minnie E. Donovan of the Lincoln School, Quincy, two of the younger teachers, advanced one position in the Shakespearian Tour list.

Miss Grace Gardner forced Miss Mary Burnett to last place in the Outside the Tour List.

In Massachusetts Mrs. Bidleman, the popular candidate from Worcester, still maintains the lead, with Miss Ellen de S. Barrett of the Jackman School, Newburyport, a close second. Competition between these two teachers has been very keen from the start, and interesting results are looked for from their many friends at the finish.

Miss Bessie Churbuck made a great gain yesterday, coming from third place in the Outside List to fifth place in the Shakespearian Tour List, with a gain of 34,833 votes.

Miss Nellie G. Connors of the Perkins School, Brockton, also comes up from Outside the Tour List to last place in the Shakespearian Tour List with a gain of 14,370 votes. These two teachers advancing, forces Miss Edith Farrington to a position outside the Tour List.

Surprise in Maine District.

The teachers in the Rhode Island and Connecticut Division seem to be resting. Miss Grace J. Allan still holds first place with Miss Agnes K. Crofwell in second place.

The big surprise of the day in the Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont District is that of Miss Nellie M. Worth, High School, Brewer, Me., who assumes lead with a gain of 214,000 votes, all taken on Special Ballot orders. Miss Moynihan, who has held the leadership from the very start, is now forced to the European Tour, while Miss Isabel Kateon, South Street School, Bath, Me., goes into the Shakespearian Tour with Miss Beatrice May.

Early Orders Necessary.

Indications are that many, many thousands of votes are being held back, and the European Tour Editor would urge the candidates to have all their Special Ballot orders in on Friday if they wish delivery to be tried for on the following Sunday. If the rush is too great delivery of these orders cannot be guaranteed until the Sunday following the close of the contest.

ONLY FOUR DAYS REMAIN IN WHICH TO VOTE. All packages and letters must be postmarked June 25, in order to be eligible. Stamp your ballots plainly, that there may be no mistake, and wrap them neatly, so they will not become detached in the mails.

It is THE SPECIAL BALLOT orders that count, and a few hours' work now among your friends may serve to win you one of these grand tours this Summer. Everything will be first class and the tours are well worth your effort.

LYNN LOSES A BIG SHOE MEET

MILWAUKEE, June 22.—In the contest between Lynn and Toronto for the convention of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Unions the latter city won by a vote of 101 to 95.

Two hours of yesterday's convention were devoted to a discussion of the trouble between Lasters' Union of Brockton and the national organization.

The Lasters' Union ordered a strike last December at E. E. Taylor & Co., and the general executive board did not approve of it. Those on strike refused to go back and the local union sustained them. Action was postponed.

ANITA SANDS TO GIVE BRIDESMAIDS' PARTY

NEWPORT, R. I., June 22.—Miss Anita Sands, who will wed Harold Minott next Saturday in Trinity Church, is not to give a dinner to her bridesmaids. She will instead introduce the new wedding fad of giving a house party to her bridesmaids, who are all at "Weebush," the bride's home.

NEAR TO DEATH, WOMAN SILENT

Mrs. Maud S. Sears, who tried to take her life yesterday by slashing her throat with a broken piece of glass, is still in a serious condition at the City Hospital. She refuses to name any of her relatives.

When the unfortunate woman was first brought to the hospital the wound looked serious, and for a time her life was despaired of.

As near as can be learned, Mrs. Sears has had domestic trouble, and for some time past she has been acting rather peculiarly. An effort is being made to locate her father.

HALF A MILLION FOR LIBRARY

Special to the Boston American.

PROVIDENCE, June 22.—A fund of $500,000 for the maintenance of the John Hay Library, made possible by Andrew Carnegie's $150,000 gift, was voted yesterday at the annual meeting of the Brown University Corporation.

Four vacant trusteeships were filled by the election of Everett Colby, '97, the reform legislator of New Jersey; Franklin E. Brooks of Colorado Springs, Benjamin F. Clarke, professor emeritus, and William Thane Peck, principal of the classical high school. A new athletic building is to be built on Andrews Field.

Blind Girl Asks for Industrial Training for the Unfortunate Ones.

Wants Tasks That Her Sightless Friends May Prove What They Can Do.

Miss Helen Keller, the world-famous blind girl, appeals for industrial training for the blind, to carry on the instruction given in the Perkins Institute for the Blind.

"Give us tasks," she asks in a letter to Secretary F. H. [illegible] of the alumni association of the Perkins Institute. Her letter was written from her Wrentham home and is as follows:

My Dear Mr. [illegible]: I read with pleasure the account you sent me of the meeting that the alumni of the Perkins Institution held last year. I regret that I cannot be present at the meeting this month. Will you kindly convey to them my sincere greetings, and my warm wishes for their success in dealing with the problems of active life.

All Efforts Must Be United.

I am glad the alumni of the Perkins Institution feel that the cause of the adult blind is their own cause. The Massachusetts association deserves to supplement the work of your alma mater by industrial training, which shall fit the blind to be strong, independent citizens, successful in the struggle of daily trade and commerce. No single institution seems to be able to answer all the needs of the thousands of blind persons in this State. But all efforts must be unified by a common devotion to their welfare.

Whatsoever the alumni undertakes for their blind fellows must affect the happiness of all the sightless of Massachusetts. Whatsoever the association may do must likewise have its influence on the pupils and alumni of the Perkins Institution as well as the less fortunate men and women who have not enjoyed the benefits of that great school.

"Give Us Tasks to Do."

Dr. Howe would certainly have been inspired by the ambition and courage of the alumni, by their will to march forward, burden on shoulder, tool in hand. He labored and prayed that the darkness which has gagged, blindfolded, fettered us and bound our hands in idle suspense might be shattered. Give us tasks that we can turn our hands to, and all the blind shall aid and encourage each other. Give us a living that we can earn, and all the blind shall be sharers in the redemption from a bondage of despair.

Massachusetts has heard the voice of her blind workmen, and her wise philanthropy which has so long upheld the Perkins Institution must be justified through you and the other blind men and women who have not trod your path of preparation to cope with the dark, but long to rise above inaction and produce something in a world of labor.

With kind messages and all good wishes, I am sincerely your friend.

HELEN KELLER.

SUES GAS COMPANY FOR INJURED HEALTH

PROVIDENCE, June 22.—For the injury to the health of his wife and daughter, resulting from an alleged imperfect meter connection, Parkman F. Hilton has begun suit against the Providence Gas Company for $10,000.

2 IMMIGRANTS RICH IN STLYE

Attired in the height of Paris fashion, Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Levosky emerged from the steerage of the Saxonia yesterday and created consternation among all present by the contrast between themselves and the shabbily clad immigrants whom they had left.

Mr. and Mrs. Levosky are Hebrews and are on their way to New York, where both have relatives. They traveled steerage for economy's sake and were well supplied with money. They were on their honeymoon.

An unmistakably French tall hat sat jauntily upon Levosky's head, his black broadcloth frock, his patent leathers and white spats and his upturned moustache made him a perfect Parisian dandy. She wore a black satin gown, closely fitted, and a Paris hat was enthroned among her black tresses.

CLOWNS GIVE SICK CHILDREN HAPPY HOURS

Little Hospital Patients Enjoy Free Show by Barnum & Bailey Funmakers.

BEST THE CIRCUS AFFORDS

Every little patient in the Children's Hospital on Huntington avenue and Gainsboro street who is able to talk is telling over and over again to-day to his friends in the institution just what was the funniest thing that the circus clowns did in the free show that was given right out on Gainsboro street for the children.

"Oh, I think that one with the dog was the funniest," said a little girl.

"No, the clowns who played baseball were the best," say many of the boys.

"Oh, I had to laugh more over that clown who was dressed like an old woman, and who had a rag baby that drank gallons and gallons of milk; she was just too funny," piped another little girl.

Discussion for Many a Day.

"I'd liked to have had some of those peanuts Barnum & Bailey sent us," grumbled a small urchin, fast bound to a couch with a broken limb though he was.

And so it goes all over the Children's Hospital to-day, and the innocent discussion will be continued for many a long day yet. Such a treat children who are suffering from all sorts of ailments never had before.

When Little Louis Wald wrote to the circus and asked that just one clown be sent to the hospital for a little bit, Manager George W. Starr got the letter and sent, not one clown, but a whole dozen of the best the great circus has and a real circus band and some acrobats.

So when Manager Starr sent the whole military band of Carl Clare, Spader Johnson, Charles Wertz, Danny Ryan, Hughy Zorello, Tom Jenks, Hyatki and son, George Brown, Steve Miacco, Arthur Borello, Dick Horner, the Gerome brothers, Sam Bennett and the Kennard brothers, with William Ducrow as director and ring master, you may be sure that there were lots of things doing.

Clowns' Hearts Were in It.

The children, all who were able to see the sights, were taken to the three balconies overlooking Gainsboro street, and there the greatest free show on earth took place, while hundreds of happy little hearts fluttered with feelings of joy and excitement to which they have been strangers far too long.

Every window, too, became a frame for some little sufferer, who was just able to see the funny things going on in the street below. It was a good show, too—no fake about it. All the dozen clowns did better work than they do in the great circus, for they were doing this for the children, and theid hearts were in it.

A dozen big policemen were there to keep the large crowd back, so that the clowns and acrobats and prize fighters and the band would have all the room that they wanted.

WELLESLEY SENIORS GIVE "THE PILGRIM" TO-NIGHT

MARGARET ERWIN AS "DUKE ORSINO."

Fletcher's Comedy to Be Presented as in Elizabethan Time, Without Scenery or Settings.

Commencement guests who will have the privilege of seeing the senior presentation of Fletcher's rare old comedy, "The Pilgrim," at Wellesley College to-night, anticipate an unusually delightful dramatic treat on account of the fame accruing to Wellesley histrionics through the production of "Twelfth Night" by the Wellesley Shakespeare Society.

The "Twelfth Night" production was considered marvellously well put on for amateurs. The players spoke their lines with grace and much expression, though their masculine garments seemed a bit strange to them at first. But soon after the curtain rose the girls had fallen into the true masculine strut and pose and bore themselves with an apparent veteran confidence. Miss Margaret Erwin as Orsino, the Duke, was delightful, and the others showed equal ability in their parts.

To-night's play by the seniors is one of the most delightful of the Elizabethan dramatics. The best dramatic talent of the class will apepar. Everything will be modelled on the play of that time. This means that the girls will have to dispense with scenery, stage settings and other accessories, depending on costuming and acting alone to achieve the dramatic consummation.

Thse taking part will be:

Stephano, a fad scholar	Tideodora Scruggs
Alinda, daughter to Alphonso, Pedro's lady	Helen M. Young
Julietta, Alinda's maid, a witty lass	Claire Sampson
Kate, a fool	Eleanor Stimson

THE JUNGLE

BY Upton Sinclair

Thrilling Story of Packingtown Which Has Startled the Nation

CHAPTER X—(Continued).

Copyright, 1906, by Doubleday, Page & Co. All rights reserved.

He was wonderfully proud of little Antanas; he was curious about all the details of him—the washing and the dressing and the eating and the sleeping of him, and asked all sorts of absurd questions. It took him quite a while to get over his alarm at the incredible shortness of the little creature's legs.

Jurgis had, alas, very little time to see his baby; he never felt the chains about him more than just then. When he came home at night the baby would be asleep, and it would be the merest chance if he awoke before Jurgis had to go to sleep himself.

Then in the morning there was no time to look at him, so really the only chance the father had was on Sundays.

This was more cruel yet for Ona, who ought to have stayed home and nursed him, the doctor said, for her own health as well as the baby's; but Ona had to go to work, and leave him for Teta Elzbieta to feed upon the pale blue poison that was called milk at the corner grocery.

Ona's confinement lost her only a week's wages—she would go to the factory the second Monday, and the best that Jurgis could persuade her was to ride in the car and let him run along behind and help her to Brown's when she alighted.

After that it would be all right, said Ona; it was no strain sitting still sewing hams all day, and if she waited longer she might find that her dreadful forelady had put someone else in her place. That would be a greater calamity than ever now, Ona continued, on account of the baby.

They would all have to work harder now on his account. It was such a responsibility—they must not have the baby grow up to suffer as they had. And this, indeed, had been the first thing that Jurgis had thought of himself—he had clenched his hands and braced himself anew for the struggle, for the sake of that tiny mite of human possibility.

Ona's Health Gone.

And so Ona went back to Brown's and saved her place and a week's wages; and so she gave herself some one of the thousand ailments that women group under the title of "womb trouble," and was never again a well person as long as she lived. It is difficult to convey in words all that this meant to Ona; it seemed such a slight offence, and the punishment was so out of all proportion, that neither she nor any one else ever connected the two.

"Womb trouble" to Ona did not mean a specialist's diagnosis and a course of treatment, and perhaps an operation or two; it meant simply headaches and pains in the back and depression and heartsickness, and neuralgia when she had to go to work in the rain.

The great majority of the women who worked in Packingtown suffered in the same way, and from the same cause, so it was not deemed a thing to see the doctor about; instead Ona would try patent medicines, one after another, as her friends told her about them.

As these all contained alcohol or some other stimulant, she found that they all did her good while she took them, and so she was always chasing the phantom of good health, and losing it because she was too poor to continue.

CHAPTER XI.

During the Summer the packing houses were in full activity again, and Jurgis made more money. He did not make so much, however, as he had the previous Summer, for the packers took on more hands. There were new men every week, it seemed—it was a regular system; and this number they would keep over to the next slack season, so that everyone would have less than ever.

But let no one suppose that this superfluity of employes meant easier work for anyone! On the contrary, the speeding-up seemed to be growing more savage all the time; they were continually inventing new devices to crowd the work on—it was for all the world like the thumbscrew of the mediaeval torture chamber.

They would get new pacemakers and pay them more; they would drive the men on with new machinery—it was said that in the hog-killing rooms the speed at which the hogs moved was determined by clock work, and that it was increased a little every day. In piece work they would reduce the time, requiring the same work in a shorter time, and paying the same wages; and then, after the workers had accustomed themselves to this new speed, they would reduce the rate of payment to correspond with the reduction in time!

They had done this so often in the canning establishments that the girls were fairly desperate; their wages had gone down by a third in the past two years, and a storm of discontent was brewing that was likely to break any day. Only a month after Marija had become a beef trimmer the canning factory that she had left posted a cut that would divide the girls' earnings almost squarely in half; and so great was the indignation at this that they marched out without even a parley, and organized in the street outside.

Lived in Fear

Jurgis and Ona heard these stories with dismay, for there was no telling when their own time might come. Once or twice there had been rumors that one of the big houses was going to cut its unskilled men to fifteen cents an hour, and Jurgis knew that if this was done, his turn would come soon. He had learned by this time that Packingtown was really not a number of firms at all, but one great firm, the Beef Trust.

And every week the managers of it got together and compared notes, and there was one scale for all the workers in the yards and one standard of efficiency. Jurgis was told that they also fixed the price they would pay for beef on the hoof and the price of all dressed meat in the country; but that was something he did not understand or care about.

The only one who was not afraid of a cut was Marija, who congratulated herself, somewhat naively, that there had been one in her place only a short time before she came. Marija was getting to be a skilled beef trimmer, and was mounting to the heights again.

During the Summer and Fall Jurgis and Ona managed to pay her back the last penny they owed her, and so she began to have a bank account. Tamoszius had a bank account also, and they ran a race, and began to figure upon household expenses once more.

The possession of vast wealth entails cares and responsibilities, however, as poor Marija found out. She had taken the advice of a friend and invested her savings in a bank on Ashland avenue. Of course she knew nothing about it, except that it was big and imposing—what possible chance has a poor foreign working girl to understand the banking business, as it is conducted in this land of frenzied finance?

So Marija lived in continual dread lest something should happen to her bank, and would go out of her way mornings to make sure that it was still there. Her principal thought was of fire, for she had deposited her money in bills, and was afraid that if they were burned up the bank would not give her any others.

Jurgis made fun of her for this, for he was a man and was proud of his superior knowledge, telling her that the bank had fire-proof vaults, and all its millions of dollars hidden safely away in them.

Run on the Bank

However, one morning Marija took her usual detour, and, to her horror and dismay, saw a crowd of people in front of the bank, filling the avenue solid for half a block. All the blood went out of her face for terror. She broke into a run, shouting to the people to ask what was the matter, but not stopping to hear what they answered, till she had come to where the throng was so dense that she could no longer advance.

There was a "run on the bank," they told her then, but she did not know what that was, and turned from one person to another, trying in an agony of fear to make out what they meant. Had something gone wrong with the bank? Nobody was sure, but they thought so. Couldn't she get her money? There was no telling; the people were afraid not, and they were all trying to get it.

It was too early yet to tell anything—the bank would not open for nearly three hours. So in a frenzy of despair Marija began to claw her way toward the doors of this building, through a throng of men, women and children, all as excited as herself. It was a scene of wild confusion, women shrieking and wringing their hands and fainting, and men fighting and trampling down everything in their way. In the midst of the melee Marija recollected that she did not have her bank-book, and could not get her money anyway, so she fought her way out and started on a run home. This was fortunate for her, for a few minutes later the police-reserves arrived.

In half an hour Marija was back, Teta Elzbieta with her, both of them breathless with running and sick with fear. The crowd was now formed in a line, extending for several blocks, with half a hundred policemen keeping guard, and so there was nothing for them to but but to take their places at the end of it.

At 9 o'clock the bank opened and began to pay the waiting throng, but then, what good did that do Marija, who saw three thousand people before her—enough to take out the last penny of a dozen banks?

To make matters worse, a drizzling rain came up and soaked them to the skin; yet all the morning they stood there, creeping slowly toward the goal—all the afternoon they stood there, heart sick, seeing that the hour of closing was coming, and that they were going to be left out.

Marija made up her mind that, come what might, she would stay there and keep her place, but as nearly all did the same, all through the long, cold night, she got very little closer to the bank for that. Toward evening Jurgis came; he had heard the story from the children, and he brought some food and dry wraps, which made it a little easier.

Waited All Night

The next morning, before daybreak, came a bigger crowd than ever, and more policemen from down town. Marija held on like grim death, and toward afternoon she got into the bank and got her money—all in big silver dollars, a handkerchief full. When she had once got her hands on them her fear vanished, and she wanted to put them back again; but the man at the window was savage, and said that the bank would receive no more deposits from those who had taken part in the run.

So Marija was forced to take her dollars home with her, watching to right and left, expecting every instant that some one would try to rob her; and when she got home she was not much better off.

Until she could find another bank there was nothing to do but sew them up in her clothes, and so Maria went about for a week or more, loaded down with bullion, and afraid to cross the street in front of the house, because Jurgis told her she would sink out of sight in the mud.

Weighted this way she made her way to the yards, again in fear, this time to see if she had lost her place; but, fortunately, about 10 per cent. of the working people of Packingtown had been depositors in that bank, and it was not convenient to discharge that many at once.

The cause of the panic had been the attempt of a policeman to arrest a drunken man in a saloon next door, which had drawn a crowd at the hour the people were on their way to work, and so started the "run."

About this time Jurgis and Ona also began a bank account. Besides having paid Jonas and Marija, they had almost paid for their furniture, and could have that little sum to count on. So long as each of them could bring home $9 or $10 a week they were able to get along finely.

Also election day came round again, and Jurgis made half a week's wages out of that, all net profit. It was a very close election that year, and the echoes of the battle reached even to Packingtown.

The two rival sets of grafters hired halls and set off fireworks and made speeches, to try to get the people interested in the matter. Although Jurgis did not understand it all, he knew enough by this time to realize that it was not supposed to be right to sell your vote.

However, as every one did it, and his refusal to join would not have made the slightest difference in the results, the idea of refusing would have seemed absurd, had it ever come into his head.

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

The Little Doctor in your Vest Pocket

SEE the thin, round-cornered little Enamel Box below! When carried in your vest pocket means Health-Insurance.

It contains Six Candy Tablets of pleasant taste, almost as pleasant as chocolate.

Each tablet is a working dose of Cascarets, which acts like Exercise on the Bowels and Liver.

It will not purge, sicken, nor upset the stomach.

Because it is not a "Bile-driver," like Salts, Sodium, Calomel, Jalap Senna, nor Aperient Waters.

These waste Digestive Juices of the system needed to-morrow, in merely flushing out the Bowels today.

Neither is it like Castor Oil, Glycerine, or other Oily Laxatives that simply lubricate the Intestines for transit of the food stopped up in them at that particular time.

These emergency drugs relieve the immediate trouble, but do not relieve its Cause.

The same trouble will therefore recur again till that Cause is removed permanently.

The chief cause of Constipation and Indigestion is a weakness of the Muscles that contract the Intestines and Bowels.

Cascarets are practically to the Bowel Muscles what a Massage and Cold Bath are to the Athletic Muscles.

They stimulate the Bowel Muscles to contract, expand, and squeeze the Digestive Juices out of food eaten.

Cascarets do this naturally, without purging or discomfort.

They don't help the Bowels and Liver in such a way as to make them lean upon similar assistance for the future.

This is why, with Cascarets, the dose may be lessened each succeeding time instead of increased, as it must be with all succeeding doses of other Cathartics and Laxatives.

Cascarets act like exercise.

If carried in your Vest Pocket, (or carried in My Lady's Purse), and eaten just when you suspect you need one you will never know a sick day from the ordinary ills of life.

Because, nearly all these ills begin in the Bowels, and partial Constipation paves the way for all other Diseases.

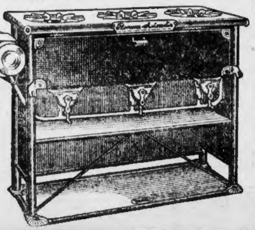
Any one can operate it with ease and perfect safety. Extra large burners—intense heat.

The Florence Automatic Oil Stove is the best stove on earth for summer use because the heat goes directly into the cooking and is not diffused throughout the kitchen. Besides being the safest, most effective, and most generally satisfactory stove, the Florence Automatic Oil Stove is the best in appearance.



Florence Automatic Oil Stoves are sold by dealers generally. If your dealer does not sell them, and if it is inconvenient for you to call at our store, send for our illustrated catalogue, giving full description.

WHOLE WORLD OF SPORTS COVERED FOR THE BOSTON AMERICAN BY ITS CORPS OF EXPERTS

GRADUATES WILL HAVE BOAT RACE

Harvard and Yale Alumni to Contest Annually for Graves Trophy.

Special to the Boston American.

GALES FERRY, June 22.—Andy Graves of Brooklyn, the old oarsman who gave Yale her greatest mascot, "Handsome Dan," is the father of a scheme to establish eternal friendliness between the old rivals. He has given a valuable trophy cup to be raced for in an annual boat race by alumni of the two universities on the Thames the week before the annual undergraduate regatta. One of the provisions of the award is that the oarsmen shall have but one day's training for the race.

The brush is to be half a mile long. The cup is to be held each year by the winner at the previous contest, and is to become the permanent property of the university which wins it five times. Both Yale and Harvard have accepted the offer and have decided to hold their first race to-morrow. Dr. Josh Hartwell of New York city, captain of the Yale '92 crew, is organizing the Yale eight. Harvard's alumni crew is being organized by Kid Perkins, whose Harvard four-oared crew created the record for the course here in 1890.

Andy Graves has been invited to row on the Yale crew to-morrow, and has accepted. Payne Whitney, who captained Yale's crew in '98, has been invited to row for Yale. He gave the Yale oarsmen a new dormitory last year.

Julian Curtiss, Yale's rowing adviser, has suggested that the Yale and Harvard alumni oarsmen adjourn to the Pequot House, New London, after the race and hold the first Yale-Harvard graduates' joint banquet ever established. Harvard graduates think that the idea is a good one and want to amend the suggestion by making it an annual affair. The race and banquet are calculated to cement Yale-Harvard rivalry into a spirit of the closest friendship.

Both Yale and Harvard crews took only the lightest work yesterday because of their time rows the night before. They are both planning to wind up their practice season here with a stiff time row over the four-mile course.

PHILADELPHIA, June 22.—This afternoon the Boston Americans will play their first game of the series with the Philadelphia American team.

The Bostons arrived in this city with blood in their eyes, because of their four straight defeats in Chicago, and they say they will make a brave attempt to clean up the local series.

The Athletics are also out for revenge to-day, as when they last met the Bostons in the Hub the latter took a double-header and made them look like has-beens.

Manager Collins of the Bostons thinks that with the new life that is being infused in the team that they will soon forge their way out of the last division.

"We are not a tail-end team by any means," said Collins to a representative of the BOSTON AMERICAN to-day, "and we should be able to get some victories coming our way pretty soon.

"With the new men that we will soon have in full swing we ought to be able to run better bases, and consequently, get more runs across the plate. The old pitchers are rounding into form with the hot weather, and it's a cinch that we will win the majority of games from now on."

George Winter will probably twirl for the Bostons to-day, while Eddie Plank or Coakley will probably pitch for the locals.

Hoey and Carrigan, the Holy Cross recruits, may play for the Pilgrims.

KEYES WON'T MEET BALDWIN

After agreeing through his manager, Billy Roche, that he would box Matty Baldwin at 130 pounds at 3 o'clock, Hock Keyes refused to live up to the agreement and wanted more time to train. The Lincoln Club promptly declared the match off and refused to do any further business with Keyes or his manager.

Miah Murray, the managing director of the Lincoln Club, says: "I would rather keep the club house closed all Summer than disappoint the members of the club. What we want is honest, level matches, where the boys are evenly matched and where both boys have an equal chance when they start to box. This I intend to have or I will have no matches at all. We are better pleased to call off the match now than to have to squabble at the last moment and disappoint our members. I believe that in a few days I shall be able to announce a match for July 4 which will be one of the best ever decided in New England."

BIG CARD AT COMBINATION TO-MORROW

The postponed Bunker Hill Day races of the Dorchester Gentlemen's Driving Club will take place at Combination Park to-morrow afternoon. The original program will be carried out. There will be mile races in the 2:19, 2:25, 2:30 and 2:40 classes for $100 purses. There are twenty-nine entries in the four events.

In addition to the above the racing committee has added two half-mile events for M. Bummett's George S. There will be between S. Walter Wales's Rondo and W. M. Bummett's George S. There will be four well-known horses in the other race. They will be Elsie Mack, Ornament, Billy Bashford and Ethel Wagner.

As a special feature Miss Ethel Haven, the sixteen-year-old daughter of Hiram Haven, one of the club's members, will endeavor to beat 4:32 with Hard Pine, the mule that recently won the Massamulla event at Readville.

Tenney's men and Patsy Donovan's Trolley Dodgers from Brooklyn will have it out for a series of four games at the South End beginning to-day, and they ought to furnish some lively diamond entertainment.

By grabbing the majority of the games the local team may have a chance to pull out of the lowliest position and let the visitors bask there for a while.

Pfeffer will open the series, and if he gets along as well as he did when he greeted the Cubs there won't be anything to it.

The results of the contests with the Cubs goes to show that the Tenneyites are capable of the unexpected and when going right not even the leading team can nose them out.

Getting two out of the four with the Cubs is going just a bit, and the beauty of the last meeting yesterday was the size of the score, when the Cubs were turned down, 10 to 1. It was something like getting revenge for the walloping the Cubs administered the day before.

Lindaman asked for another chance against the Cubs, as he considered he did not get a square deal when pulled out of a game at the end of the first inning, as he was in the swamping that came the day he started the game.

The wisdom of letting the ex-Jersey pitcher have his way was proven by the effectiveness he showed from start to finish. Five hits were all the Cubs could get, and they were lucky to prevent a whitewash.

It was a treat to watch Tenney's men hit the ball. Beebe, a Western recruit, was given a chance, but he lasted for three and a half innings, when five runs and eight hits had been made off him, and he had passed three men in that period. He was succeeded by Overall, the ex-Red Giant, who could not stop the rally, and he was hit hard and often.

Bates and Tenney made the best records for the day with the willow, and Brown was the only player to score a double, which netted a couple of runs. Every member of the winning nine in the front part of the list was there with the stick.

HARVARD PLAYS YALE NINE ON TUESDAY NEXT

Yale and Harvard will play the second game in their series at New Haven next Tuesday. If the Blue wins this game they will have landed the championship, otherwise a deciding contest will be waged at New York the following Saturday.

The Old Eli nine had an easy time beating Harvard yesterday at Soldiers' Field before a brilliant crowd. The score was 3 to 1, the lone tally of the Crimson being made on an error.

Yale played a better all-around game than did Harvard. Myer, who twirled for Yale, allowed Harvard but three hits, while the the match in the last five seconds of play. Blue batters were able to touch up Castle for ten.

It certainly was batting that won the game for Yale, as after the second inning the Cambridge players did not get a man beyond second, while the New Haven warriors had men on bases in every inning but the eighth.

VANDERBILT RACE STEAMERS IN TESTS

BY J. C. KERRISON.

The two steamers which were built for the coming Vanderbilt road race and which were tried out at the Readville meet are again on the roads. Some slight alterations have been made, and in a test of one of the cars, made yesterday morning, the advantages thereof were plainly evident. Down draughts have been placed on both cars, and the engine slightly rebuilt, while the burners have been so altered as to increase the gasolene burning capacity.

Yesterday morning one of these cars was seen on the roads, and while but little opportunity was given to witness its work, there is every reason to believe it is a more efficient machine than ever. Another trip is said to have been given the car yesterday afternoon. Although no official information is obtainable it is understood that the cars will be changed from time to time according to exigencies that may arise, in order to get them in the very best of condition for the great contest in October.

This is the last day on which the present automobile law or laws will be operative. To-morrow the law enacted during the present sitting of the Legislature will go into effect. The town laws and ordinances under this become obsolete, and in order to govern the motors other than by the State law the several towns and cities will have to enact new ordinances. The State law permits a speed of twenty miles an hour outside the congested districts, and twelve miles an hour in thickly settled parts of a town or city.

President J. P. Coghlin of the Worcester Automobile Club was in Boston yesterday. He had a long conference with Referee L. R. Speare with the idea of straightening out the multitudinous tangles of the recent hill climb given by his club. The protests are thicker than flies around a molasses barrel, and the astute officials have no small amount of trouble on hand. Late protests were filed. Then came counter protests. Now the difficulty is to sift the chaff from the wheat, and determine what is what. In speaking about the idea of establishing a national hill climb on Dead Horse Hill President Coghlin said matters were shaping themselves nicely, and he would not be at all surprised if such a contest was held within the next two years.

The Albany Automobile Club left Rutland, Vt., for Keene this morning, and should arrive in Boston about noon to-morrow. There are some twenty-five members on the run. It is proposed to give them a grand reception upon their arrival in Boston. Chairman E. A. Gilmore of the Boston club is arranging a reception to the visitors, and will possibly head a delegation which will go to Concord and honor the men from Albany.

Charles E. Fay, manager of the local branch of the Ford Motor Car Company, is decidedly busy these days in meeting the numerous prospective customers for his six-cylinder. Throughout this week the demonstration car has been busy every minute of the day, and not only that, but several sales have been made of the six-cylinder, which seems the very embodiment of power and efficiency.

ST. BRENDEN GAMES ON 4TH

The Knights of St. Brenden of Boston and vicinity will hold a picnic at Harbor View Park, South Boston, on July 4, and the feature will be the open handicap games under the direction of Joe McNamara of the Tyler street gym.

The events are 100-yard dash, 440-yard dash, 880-yard run, mile run, running high jump, running broad jump, putting sixteen-pound shot, five-mile run, scratch. Gold and silver watches will go to first and second prize winners, and dress suit cases to thirds in each event. Entries close with Joe McNamara, Tyler street gymnasium, on Friday, June 29.

MAY RACE JOHN M. IN GRAND CIRCUIT MEET

A new stunt for the local owners and trainers of horses at the tracks near Boston has been set by Eddie Rice, who is handling his two pacers, John M. (2:02¾) and Sufreet (2:06¼), at the Old Saugus race course, by stepping the latter a trial mile in her work in 2:16¾.

This is the mare he bought at the "down east" sale at Readville, and "Happy Jack" Trout firmly believes she is capable of pulling down a lot of money in her class if raced this year.

But just what Mr. Rice's plans are for the season cannot be found out, as he has absolutely refused to give out the information to his closest friends.

One thing he has settled on is that under no conditions will he have John M. campaigned extensively. Sufreet he bought solely with the idea of driving on the road and matineeing when the time comes. Both of them are in the care of "Teddy" Dunn. On pleasant Tuesdays and Fridays Mr. Rice goes to Saugus and gives them their fast work. This he enjoys hugely.

If John M. comes along in his preparation to suit, he will be started in the Grand Circuit meeting at Readville, with possibly a race before at Dover, N. H., to put the finishing touches in conditioning for the select company he will meet.

There has been considerable talk that when the time comes either Trout, who raced Anaconda (2:01¾) for Mr. Rice, or Jimmy Timothy, the Combination Park trainer, will get the mount. However that may be, the owner of John M. refuses to say, and some persons are plain to declare he will not decide till the day the gelding races.

GO-BETWEEN IS WINNER OF SUBURBAN

NEW YORK, June 22.—In a terrific drive from the sixteenth pole in the stretch and fighting it out head to head to the wire, Go-Between, Alexander Shields' five-year-old Meddler-Indigo gelding, at 6 to 1, carrying 116 pounds, won the classic Suburban at Sheepshead Bay over Dandelion, which was an equal favorite in the betting with Cairngorm, at 3 to 1.

Go-Between won by a length, while Dandelion was two lengths to the good of the Colonial Girl, who was backed down from 20 to 1 to 15 to 1. Shaw was the jockey that won $20,000 for Shields, while Miller was up on the place horse.

SERPENT AND BEETLE FORM STARTLING BRACELET FOR NEWPORT SOCIETY BELLE

Coiled Snake on the Arm Glares Down Upon Scarab Set in Huge Ring Worn on First Finger

SENSATIONAL, even startling in its silent, yet dramatic suggestion, is a dainty device in jewelry which has just appeared upon the arms and fingers of the fairest of the fair in the tip-top social circles of exclusive Newport.

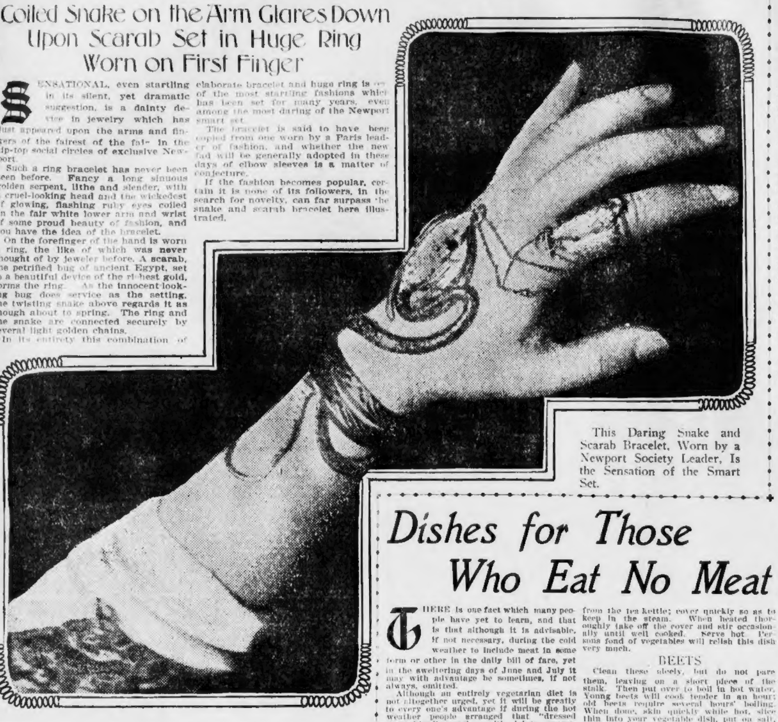
Such a ring bracelet has never been seen before. Fancy a long sinuous golden serpent, lithe and slender, with a cruel-looking head and the wickedest of glowing, flashing ruby eyes coiled on the fair white lower arm and wrist of some proud beauty of fashion, and you have the idea of the bracelet.

On the forefinger of the hand is worn a ring, the like of which was never thought of by jeweler before. A scarab, the petrified bug of ancient Egypt, set in a beautiful device of the richest gold, forms the ring. As the innocent-looking bug does service as the setting, the twisting snake above regards it as though about to spring. The ring and the snake are connected securely by several light golden chains.

In its entirety this combination of elaborate bracelet and huge ring is one of the most startling fashions which has been set for many years, even among the most daring of the Newport smart set.

The bracelet is said to have been copied from one worn by a Paris leader of fashion, and whether the new fad will be generally adopted in these days of elbow sleeves is a matter of conjecture.

If the fashion becomes popular, certain it is none of its followers, in the search for novelty, can far surpass the snake and scarab bracelet here illustrated.



This Daring Snake and Scarab Bracelet, Worn by a Newport Society Leader, Is the Sensation of the Smart Set.

The World Has Little Use for Confirmed Cranks and Pessimists

By Beatrice Fairfax

DO you ever feel misunderstood and as though the whole world were against you? Do you feel that you are a suffering martyr, whom nobody appreciates?

When you feel that way it is time for a little self-examination. Just look into your heart and see if there is not a good deal of bitterness and discontent there.

It stands to reason that you can't be right and all the rest of humanity wrong.

The world will take you pretty much as it finds you. If you are cranky, pessimistic and soured you will always be left to yourself, friendless and lonely.

You may try to comfort yourself with the theory that you are misunderstood, but that is not so; it is simply that people will not trouble themselves to be nice to any one who will not take the trouble to make himself agreeable.

The strange thing about it is that the person who takes the least pains to be popular is very often the one who most craves popularity.

The girl who does not hesitate to say sharp, unkind things, is the one who feels most hurt when such things are said about herself.

Popularity will not come for nothing; you must earn it. And once earned you must work hard to keep it.

Sarcastic, sharp or unkind speeches will never win it for you. It takes geniality, kindliness and unselfishness to win popularity.

Don't sulk and feel that every one is down on you.

Sulkiness is not an attractive quality, and no one will take the trouble to investigate and bring you out of your unlovely mood. They will just leave you alone, and let you come round as best you may.

Life is too short to waste one moment of it in sulky solitude.

You know the old nursery rhyme about the "little girl who had a little curl in the middle of her forehead; when she was good she was very, very good, but when she was bad she was horrid?"

Well, it's very nice to be "very, very good," but it never pays to be "horrid."

People don't have to put up with the disagreeable man or woman, and they won't do it, that's all.

When you get up in the morning and feel cross and cranky the best thing to do is to keep quiet until the mood has passed.

If you once lose control of yourself you will be sure to say something which you will regret later.

Instead of saying to yourself, "Everything is going wrong to-day," just say, "What is the matter with me?" Nine times out of ten the fault will lie with yourself.

Give the best that you are capable of to the world every day and all day.

Be cheerful, kind and sympathetic, and you will find yourself a thoroughly appreciated and much sought after person.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

By Beatrice Fairfax

THE WOMAN'S PLACE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Two years ago I became acquainted with a young woman whom I found gentle and kind. Since then I have always had the highest admiration for her.

Our friendship has continued until this week, when we met upon a car on Harvard bridge, when she purposely refused to recognize or speak to me.

Is it not a woman's place to first address a man?

Is it not understood when she declines to speak that she desires no further acquaintance? A.

YES, it is the woman's place to speak first, and if she refuses to recognize you in the street I should say that it was an intimation that she no longer cared to know you. The chances are that she has some imaginary cause of anger against you.

NOT THE RIGHT THING

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I work in an office and happen to sit at a window. Every afternoon a young man travels by my window and he seems as if he would like to get acquainted with me. The other day he motioned for me to meet him in the evening.

Do you think it would be wrong for me to meet him some evening, as I do not know anyone who knows him so as I can get an introduction to him, and it seems as if he is in the same predicament? "17."

YOU know nothing about the young man and it certainly would be wrong for you to go out and meet him.

Dishes for Those Who Eat No Meat

THERE is one fact which many people have yet to learn, and that is that although it is advisable, if not necessary, during the cold weather to include meat in some form or other in the daily bill of fare, yet in the sweltering days of June and July it may with advantage be sometimes, if not always, omitted.

Although an entirely vegetarian diet is not altogether urged, yet it will be greatly to every one's advantage if during the hot weather people arranged that "dressed vegetables," together with dainty concoctions of macaroni and other nutritious foods, should form one of their chief meals.

These dishes may, and probaly will be, more trouble to prepare than a roast joint, with boiled potatoes, but the benefit obtained will be well worth the pains they cost.

SCALLOPED POTATOES

Two cups of mashed potatoes, two tablespoonfuls of cream or milk and one of melted butter; salt and pepper to taste. Stir the potatoes, butter and cream together, adding one raw egg. If the potatoes seem too moist, beat in a few fine bread crumbs. Bake in a hot oven for ten minutes, taking care to have the top a rich brown.

VEGETABLE HASH

Chop rather coarsely the remains of vegetables left from a boiled dinner, such as cabbage, parsnips, potatoes, etc., sprinkle over them a little pepper; place in a saucepan or frying-pan over the fire; put in a piece of butter the size of hickory nut; when it begins to melt, tip the dish so as to oil the bottom, and around the sides; then pour in the chopped vegetables; pour in a spoonful or two of hot water from the tea kettle; cover quickly so as to keep in the steam. When heated thoroughly take off the cover and stir occasionally until well cooked. Serve hot. Persons fond of vegetables will relish this dish very much.

BEETS

Clean these nicely, but do not pare them, leaving on a short piece of the stalk. Then put over to boil in hot water. Young beets will cook tender in an hour; old beets require several hours' boiling. When done, skin quickly while hot, slice thin into your vegetable dish, put on salt, pepper and a little butter, put over a little vinegar and serve hot or cold.

ASPARAGUS WITH EGGS

Boil a bunch of asparagus twenty minutes; cut off the tender tops and lay in a deep pieplate, buttering, salting and peppering well. Beat four eggs just enough to break up the yolks, add a tablespoonful of melted butter, with pepper and salt, and pour upon the asparagus. Bake eight minutes in a quick oven and serve immediately.

VEGETBLE OMELET

Make a puree by mashing up ready-dressed vegetables, together with a little milk, cream or gravy, and some seasoning. The most suitable vegetables are cucumbers, artichokes, onions, sorrel, green peas, tomatoes, lentils, mushrooms, asparagus tops, potatoes, truffles or turnips. Prepare some eggs by beating them very light. Pour them into a nice hot frying pan, containing a spoonful of butter; spread the puree upon the upper side; and when perfectly hot turn or fold the omelet together and serve. Or cold vegetables may be merely chopped small, then tossed in a little butter and some beaten and seasoned eggs poured over.

HOW TO SAVE THE BABY

THIS, the final article on "How to Save the Babies," will be devoted to the discussion of teething and rules governing the baby's sleep.

It is on account of the feverish condition accompanying the cutting of the eight front teeth that the stomach becomes irritated and unable to digest the food properly. These teeth should be through and out of the way of trouble by the end of the baby's first year, but until they come the child is apt to be restless and irritable, if not actually sick.

The mother can do much toward allaying the sleeplessness and restlessness attendant upon this period of the child's existence.

In the first place it should sleep alone, having nothing to disturb its rest.

Right here print this in great big letters on your minds, UNDER NO CIRCUMSTANCES GIVE THE BABY OPIATES OR "SOOTHING SIRUPS," WHICH ARE THE SAME THING, UNLESS BY ORDER OF A PHYSICIAN. No matter if your neighbor has had good results from some certain kind which she recommends. What helped her baby may kill yours.

Here is what the State Board of Health thinks about it:

Warning for Mothers

"If your baby shows signs of colic don't dose it with paregoric, whiskey, brandy or soothing sirup. Colic is often a symptom of some condition which needs attention. Drugging the baby into insensibility will not remove the cause of illness. Colic is often due to constipation. It may come from cold hands and feet. Keep the baby's hands and feet warm. Give a little castor oil. Keep a flannel stomach band on the baby Summer and Winter. Don't drug the baby. When the baby is sick enough to need soothing sirup, it is sick enough to need a doctor. Soothing sirups have killed many babies.

"The majority of so-called 'Soothing Sirups' contain opium, a deadly poison, one especially deadly to infants. As stated, soothing sirups have killed many babies."

Allow the baby to get all the natural sleep possible. Very young babies sleep nearly all the time and all should take one long nap during the day time. After the third month, if properly trained, Baby should sleep all night without nursing. Never wake it to feed it.

Some Remedies

Give the baby a hot foot bath if it is suffering from its teeth. This relieves the congestion in the head and mouth, and it will be easy in consequence. A little mustard may be added to the water with good effect. A little castor oil will often relieve the suffering infant as soon as it acts internally.

Rub your finger, which has been dipped in sirup of lettuce, gently over the baby's inflamed gums, and if not too painful give a little pressure upon the places through which the points of teeth are trying to pierce their way. Thus you may assist the process of cutting.

A small chicken or ham bone from which the meat has been well removed may be allowed the baby upon which to gnaw.

Avoid rubber teething rings as small bits may be swallowed at a great risk to the little one's stomach.

The price of baby's health is eternal vigilance. Neglect of the first symptoms of indigestion may lead to the serious illness or death of the child.

Some Recipes

In case that there are mothers who do not know how to prepare barley water and oatmeal water, the following recipes are given:

BARLEY WATER—Barley water is often used in diluting milk for infant feeding and tends to make the curds of milk more easily digestible. Barley water is made as follows: To two tablespoonfuls of barley meal add enough of a quart of cold water to make a thin paste, and then add the remainder of the quart of water; stir and boil fifteen to twenty minutes. Barley flour is much better than pearl barley and requires much less cooking. Pearl barley should be boiled for two to three hours. Barley water should not be kept from day to day, but should be made fresh every morning.

OATMEAL WATER—Oatmeal water is used in the same way as barley water, especially when a laxative effect is desired. To make it, stir two tablespoonfuls of oatmeal in a quart of boiling water, cover and let simmer for two hours. Replace the water as it evaporates so that there will be a quart when done. Strain. Do not use a second day. Make fresh every day.

May Increase Food

A gruel made of barley, arrowroot or oatmeal may be added to the child's food with good results after the seventh month, beginning with a very small quantity and increasing gradually as the child grows older. Four ounces of thick strained oatmeal and one-half ounce of orange juice make a palatable as well as a valuable food for the growing child.

Orange juice by itself should be given to every baby, unless it has been demonstrated that it does not agree with the stomach. It is a good rule to give a half-ounce of orange juice daily to all babies over six months of age.

Acting upon the principle that if a baby is worth having, it is worth saving, this course of articles has been given, and there is no doubt that if the advice offered is followed by mothers more than one-half of the babies who would otherwise die during the Summer can be saved.

With the hope that the instructions will prove of benefit to the mothers of babies who are silently pleading for a fighting chance, the final installment is concluded.

Bolero Is Pretty If Properly Worn

WITH all the many good points which boleros have about them, which make them popular with home dressmakers and dress artists alike, there are no end of petty troubles which follow hard upon their trail—little points which must be carefully looked to in wearing them.

To see a woman go down the street with bolero and skirt separated by an irregular line of white where the blouse has quite literally bloused out of its proper bounds; with gloves too obviously pulled up over long blouse sleeves and failing to meet the elbow sleeve of the jacket, is a sorry sight, indeed.

No style that is popular this season requires so much care in the putting on as do bolero fashions. The blouse must be pulled down in a thoroughly trig fashion and adjusted so that it won't ride up. One way of accomplishing this is to wear a narrow belt of elastic directly over the blouse and under the skirt. If this elastic be flat and drawn through a small, flat wire buckle, the blouse should "stay put" splendidly.

So many of the prettiest suits have some sort of a deep girdle to match that it is a great help in getting a general trig effect; but even then blouse and skirt should be trim when the bolero is off—there must be no ugly blousing over the top of the girdle under the arms.

Sometimes girdle or corselet is made of the same material as the suit; oftener, when the suit is of cloth, the girdle is of silk that matches, which makes much the prettier girdle, for it can be draped and laid upon a fitted foundation without making the waist seem thick.

If your bolero is, as nine out of ten are, made with short sleeves, wear short-sleeved blouses with it, or with long sleeves which can be deftly tucked up to the elbow.

"SHADOWS OF NEW YORK"

By Sidney Warwick

CHAPTER LIII.—Continued

Copyright, 1906, by American-Journal-Examiner.

UNDER ordinary circumstances the fear of the law would have backed his demand with a force that would have cowed these scoundrels into instant submission.

But, as it was, his inability to enlist the help of the police tied his hands.

He dared take no course that would again consign this girl to a prison cell—and these scoundrels would be well aware of that. Yet rescue her he must and would; but how?

Meantime, with Jim, he hastened to Brooklyn and started for the locality of Rumfit's store to reconnoitre.

They were walking rapidly when a low, frightened exclamation broke from the boy at his side.

"Back into the shadow or he'll see us! Come back!" the boy whispered, clutching at Herries's arm, with one terrified glance up the road.

Dishonesty!

Startled, Herries looked in the direction of the [illegible] glance, and saw dimly outlined in the fast deepening dusk of the night the figure of a tall, fat man coming toward them.

Scarcely had the boy spoken when the wild piercing scream of a little tug pulling a big four-master up the river, that seemed to lend a note of emphasis to the warning, almost drowned the last words.

"That—that's the old man."

"That's the old man," whispered Jim, breathlessly, as he shrank back behind the shadow of the doorway, leaving Herries startled.

The man who had decoyed Olga into his power!

Rumfit passed along the road, glancing indifferently in the direction of John Herries, who at his approach had turned his face toward the river; the boy he did not see. The man walked leisurely along toward the river.

The "fence" was out on a little matter of business to see an acquaintance of his, the captain of a coasting vessel lying alongshore; a little matter of some stores which the skipper was pleased to consider superfluous for the requirements of his voyage and proposed to dispose of to Rumfit.

"Things that ain't no good to nobody," Rumfit would put it in his jocular way. "My motter is never to despise small transactions, and to oblige captains of boats as has took on board a superfluity of stores and don't want to worry the owners about a little matter like that."

Mr. Rumfit was never loath to turn a dishonest penny.

One wonders what the man did with all his money, or what possible enjoyment it brought to him or his wife, who lived in the most sordid, miserly way. It was well known that "Daddy" was a "warm" man; he had his grubby fingers in a score of pies, whence he fished out many a fat plum. At any rate, if the twain did not spend it, they were greedy enough of acquiring more.

The huge figure of Mr. Rumfit disappeared down the dark pathway.

His primary object was to see what light the vessel in question was displaying. The hanging out of a certain colored light was a pre-arranged signal between Rumfit and his acquaintance, the skipper, telling the receiver that the goods might be removed safety.

A Bright Youth

As Rumfit disappeared out of sight, Jim darted out of his hiding place to Herries and whispered eagerly.

"That gives us our chance! The old man out—and only the old woman at home! A chance in a hundred, boss—will you come?"

"I'd have come if there wasn't half a chance," was Herries's reply. Impatient and eager as he had been to make an attempt to rescue Olga, the words had infected him with some of the boy's excitement. "What is your plan?"

"Something I heard this afternoon between the Farmer and Rumfit, it's given me an idea. Tell yer as we go. Come quick."

* * * * * *

At the moment when Jim stole out to meet Herries, Olga was sitting in her bedroom a prisoner, with the key turned in the lock.

Not only was the friend of Marr, otherwise the Farmer, expected in connection with the plot afoot to steal the diamond known as "The Mirror of the Moon," and it would be inadvisable to discuss the details in the girl's hearing, but Mrs. Rumfit was apprehensive of an attempt on Olga's part to escape after dark.

"We shall have a bit of trouble with that gal at fust," said Mother Rumfit. "I can see we shall before we break that sperrit of hers—fine lot of her honesty's brought 'er!" with a contemptuous sniff. "I can see plain we shall have some trouble with 'er, but she'll be too useful for us to let 'er slip through our fingers. And she'll find she has to come round in time.

"And she's that sly and secretive—never drops so much as an 'int of how she happens to be in that motoring coat when we runs up again her. There's some mystery about that coat, if we could only git to the bottom of it. A gentleman's coat, too, and made in Fifth avenue—that's the funny part of it," she grumbled to her husband, consumed with curiosity. "Of all the things I can't bear it is a secretive disposition."

Her husband had gone out to see his friend the coasting skipper; the shop was shut and in darkness, and Mrs. Rumfit was anathematizing the boy Jim, who had not yet returned, when there was a low, cautious knock at the private door.

Mrs. Rumfit went to the door and opened it.

Another Visitor

As she did so the man who had knocked happened to be whistling a certain tune that Marr, alias the Farmer, and at least one of that day's customers had been humming as they entered the shop.

That was a curious circumstance about certain of those who called to see Mr. Rumfit—not so much that they appeared to be musically inclined, as that they invariably whistled the same air. It may be assumed that the tune this caller was whistling was not lost upon Mother Rumfit.

"I've come to see Mr. Rumfit," the man said in a low voice, while Mrs. Rumfit's eyes were bent scrutinizingly on him. "I think he expects me. I'm Mr. Farmer's friend from the country."

The lady's face at once assumed an amiable smile.

"Oh, you're Farmer's pal. My old man ain't in jest now, but he won't be long—he was expecting you. Will you step inside? The Farmer was here this morning and said you'd be coming."

The man entered. She shut the door and led the way to the back parlor.

"Farmer's told us a lot about you and what a fly cove you are. But, lor'! Ain't you quite the howling swell—he didn't tell us that!" leered the old hag, as the gaslight gave her a better view of her visitor.

The man laughed. Rather a good-looking man of about thirty, well and quietly dressed.

CHAPTER LIV.

On the Trail

"IT'S my business to be a swell, mother—swell crook, anyhow!" he observed. "I believe in doing the thing thoroughly—in dressing for the part from top to toe. My sparklers now—genuine from Maiden lane. Nothing much wrong with this little lot, eh? Bought the rig-out from the valet to a millionaire."

"Blessed if you don't look like a millionaire yerself!" chuckled Mrs. Rumfit, admiringly. "I can see the Farmer's sent the right chap—you're jest the one for that Maiden lane job. I suppose you're going to——"

The man's mouth seemed to close with a snap.

"Never you mind what you suppose or what you don't suppose," he said, roughly. "I only talk business in business hours. Many a man's got bagged before to-day because he didn't know when to keep his mouth shut. How long will Rumfit be? Why the devil did he got out when he was expecting me?"

"You see, you're a bit earlier than Farmer said. I don't suppose Rumfit 'll be more than ten minutes at the outside, mebbe less," said Mrs. Rumfit, in no wise offended at her visitor's rebuff. In fact, this business-like proof of his caution commended itself to her. "Sit down and make yourself at home——"

A Clever Ruse

"Here, mother, can you send any one out for a bottle of whiskey?" said the man, feeling in his pocket and producing a five-spot, "then we shan't be dry talking over the little job. I'd go myself, only I'm not over anxious to show my face over much in this neighborhood from reasons you may guess."

"Isn't a soul in the house I can send," was the reply—"that young rascal Jim that I sent out to fetch a drop might 'ave skipped with the quarter; he's been that long; 'as 'ad time to walk across Brooklyn bridge and ain't back yet!

"However," she added with a coquettish leer on her painted, withered face, "since it's to oblige such a nice-looking young chap as you—well, I don't mind going myself!"

"You're a good sort, mother, I can see!" exclaimed the other, as Mrs. Rumfit proceeded to put on her shawl and bonnet. "Get the best rye—a drop won't come amiss to you, either, I'll be bound!" he added, with a laugh, handing her the five.

Mother Rumfit looked at the bill closely, and asked, in bantering pleasantry:

"It ain't home-made, I suppose—a queer one you want to get me to pass for yer?" and she shook her head, surmounted by the dirty pink roses, waggishly at him. "You see, I knows something about the Farmer's friends from Boston and their little ways!"

The man laughed, too, as if enjoying the joke.

"Well, I'll make you a sporting offer," he said. "Give you $4.99 a piece for as many as good as that you like to sell me! No, mother, we don't put 'em up against our pals—besides, it wouldn't be much use in trying to take you in with one!" And he winked at the lady, who appeared to be highly flattered.

Mrs. Rumfit left Mr. Farmer's friend ensconced in the dilapidated arm chair usually sacred to her husband and walked down the long passage to the street door on her errand.

Almost as she reached it there was a knock, which she recognized as that of the master of the house.

She opened the door. Standing outside she saw, not only her husband, but also Marr.

"The Farmer's been able to come up after all," said Rumfit—"met him as I was coming back from the stairs. The skipper had a red light out, so I shall have to go later," he added.

"Well, I'm glad you haven't kep' your pal waiting," said Mrs. Rumfit to Marr. "Not that he's been here more than five minutes or so——"

$1000.00 Prize Song, 10c

"Sweet Nellie Wood" is one of the successful songs in the great $1,000.00 prize contest held by the American Music Library. The success of the song in this contest immediately brought the piece to the attention of the versatile actress, Marie Cahill. LABOR NEWS

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL BOSTON, MASS. 96

Boston labor unions are receiving a circular from the United Hebrew Trades, composed of New York Socialist trades unions, asking them to unite in a call for a national convention of labor organizations in Washington to protest against the persecution of Moyer and Haywood, charged with the Steunenberg murder. The convention, the address says, will take place if one hundred local unions express their willingness to send delegates.

It denounces the capitalist system, and declares that the charges are made to discredit the Western Federation of Miners. "Will the American workingman ever awake?" it reads. "Will he ever become conscious of his rights and duties? Will he forever permit the Manufacturers' Association and Mine Owners' Association to rule the land? Will capitalism forever dictate the laws of this country?

"Now is the time for a unanimous protest on the part of the working people and all other liberty loving men and women. Let all local unions, national and international labor bodies, come together in the city of Washington, where now capital rules supreme, and let the unanimous and emphatic voice of organized labor be heard throughout the land in condemnation of the infamous tactics of the enemies of the working class. The convention shall adopt such resolutions and measures to enforce the resolutions as shall make it impossible for the capitalist ridden judges to deny justice to the leaders of the working class."

The Boston and Chelsea Central Labor Unions, the Boston Cigarmakers' Union and other large labor organizations have already passed resolutions condemning the railroading of the two officials of the Western Federation of Miners to jail without a trial.

The Treason of the United States Senate

Another Instalment of David Graham Phillips's Remarkable and VALUABLE Investigation

A great service is rendered to the people of this country by David Graham Phillips in his exposure of "The Treason of the Senate."

It is not possible to understand the fundamental rottenness of our plutocratic system of government without following the remarkable articles which Mr. Phillips is publishing in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

You may find to-day on the news stands the July number of The Cosmopolitan, in which Mr. Phillips deals with that charming "Democratic statesman," BAILEY OF TEXAS.

We believe that a majority of our thinking citizens will read Mr. Phillips's article entire, for their own information, and we URGE them to purchase the July Cosmopolitan and do so. The article is in itself a complete lesson in modern American politics.

IT PROVES THAT WE MUST HAVE A CHANGE, AND A RADICAL CHANGE, or that our so-called republic must remain what it is now, a plutocratic farce.

Take a rapid look at this "statesman Bailey"—as Phillips paints him—before you read in detail the Cosmopolitan's complete arraignment.

Bailey is held up to the American people (chiefly by himself) as the PEOPLE'S incorruptible friend.

With a big body, a big voice and an enormous egotism, he talks platitudes until the trusts ring the bell—then he votes as they tell him to.

He is the man accused by an able newspaper correspondent of working with Aldrich and selling out the people in connection with the railroad rate legislation.

It is understood that the correspondent, in explaining briefly and truthfully Bailey's activity, was using information supplied by President Roosevelt.

But wherever he got the information, Mr. Phillips, in his Cosmopolitan article, proves what Bailey really IS, proves that the railroads have made him rich—and that they and big men with money own HIM.

It was Bailey who worked—and worked successfully—to turn the State of Texas over to the Standard Oil—although the people of the State had demanded and enacted a splendid law aimed at that very trust.

Bailey—"friend of the PEOPLE"—is rich.

How do you suppose he got rich? It is so typical of the average corporation lawyer engaged in fooling and cheating the people that the story must be told.

Phillips gives it in the words of the man—railroad owner, speculator, general all-around plutocrat—who gave Bailey his money.

Says this man:

"Yes, I paid Bailey more than two hundred thousand dollars in fees, first and last. I paid him for services to me individually an additional sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, AND STILL OWE HIM SOMETHING."

OF COURSE, he still OWES HIM SOMETHING. Every plutocrat, EVERY man who needs special legislation, or specially tame Senators, will owe Bailey "something" as long as Bailey is in the Senate.

What do you suppose Bailey did to earn the "more than two hundred thousand dollars" which ONE prosperous plutocrat paid him?

Bailey got for his hirer from one company, "the 'Frisco system," sixteen hundred thousand dollars.

"Thus," says Kirby, who hires Bailey, "he saved us from bankruptcy. He procured loans to the company (in which Kirby was interested) aggregating more than $1,500,000 in additional cash from the Rock Island road, from Kountz Brothers, etc., etc. In addition, he sold treasury stock for $1,000,000 and Houston Oil preferred stock for $733,000."

That is PART of the work which a "Democratic statesman" did for a plutocratic gentleman willing and able to pay him two hundred thousand dollars as a fee, with EXTRAS.

When Bailey was doing this work—and buying expensive horses with trust money—he was all the time sitting in the Senate "representing the people."

The people paid him five thousand dollars a year—while the corporations gladly handed him TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS and TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS IN A LUMP.

Which do you suppose got the better service from Mr. Bailey—the PEOPLE or the TRUSTS?

It is this "Democrat," Bailey of Texas, who has the effrontery to pose as one working to control railroad rates. Do you think the gentleman who has been borrowing $1,600,000 from the San Francisco road, a million and a half from another road, a million from this banking firm, and so on, AND GETTING TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLAR FEES, is apt TO ANNOY RAILROADS VERY MUCH?

Can you not see how ridiculous is our whole Senatorial system?

Here is this Bailey—commonly accepted by ignorant Americans as a type of the simple Democrat!

And David Graham Phillips shows you, tucked away in Bailey's capacious pocket, a fee of two hundred thousand dollars for one single "job" needed by "the interests."

Suppose you were paying a watchman five thousand dollars a year to protect your store and you found out that the burglar on your block was paying him TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS AT A TIME, wouldn't you change your watchman?

You intelligent readers must read carefully this article by Phillips in the July Cosmopolitan. Think over the situation for yourselves. See how Bailey worked to give away the public lands to corporations.

Read how he fought a bill to protect the people's food supply.

Study him posing as the "champion of the Constitution" while fighting every law needed by the people and opposed by the trusts that hire him.

You have got to SEE how the trusts buy your representatives outright—or "fee them," which is the same thing—to understand why politics in this country is rotten, why trusts despise the people whose guardians they have bought.

You American people put watchmen on duty and allow the trust pirates to buy them.

You have got to change your watchmen and stop the wholesale buying of them if you want to continue living under a republican form of government.

You must get rid of the Baileys, the Aldriches, the Spooners and all the other bought and sold traitors in your Senate—or frankly abandon your government and your country to the scoundrel with the biggest purse and the toughest conscience.

I AM serenity. Though passions beat
  Like mighty billows on my helpless heart,
I know beyond them lies the perfect sweet
  Serenity which patience can impart.
And when wild tempests in my bosom rage,
"Peace, peace!" I cry; "it is my heritage."

I am good health. Though fevers rack my brain
  And rude disorders mutilate my strength,
A perfect restoration after pain
  I know shall be my recompense at length.
And so, through grievous day and sleepless night,
"Health, health!" I cry; "it is my own by right."

I am success. Though hungry, cold, ill-clad,
  I wander for a while, I smile and say;
"It is but for a time—I shall be glad
  To-morrow, for good fortune comes my way.
God is my father; He has wealth untold,
His wealth is mine—health, happiness and gold."

Keeping House in a Paper Bag

By Winifred Black

A PAPER-BAG housekeeper came and told me her troubles this morning while I was sitting on the porch watching the finches building a snug nest in the swaying vines.

"What in the world are we all going to do?" she said. "I'm just about crazy trying to get something that my husband will eat. I wish the old newspapers would stop telling what awful things everything is made of. It doesn't help it any to know all about it; so what are we going to do—live on air?

"Now, there's sausage. I had sausage for breakfast this morning, and not a bite of it would my husband touch. Then I sent out and got some ham and eggs cooked, and he nibbled a little at the eggs, but wouldn't even look at the ham.

"Last night I had catsup on the table and my husband made me have it taken away again. He wouldn't touch the jelly cake at lunch because he said he didn't know what the jelly was made of, and not a bite of pie or any kind of pastry will he eat sinc he's read about the lard. I don't know how we are going to keep from starving."

"Why don't you make your own sausage and your own catsup and your own jelly and try out your own lard, the way your mother used to do?" I asked innocently; "and the bread—can't your cook bake?"

"Good gracious!" said the paper-bag housekeeper, "my cook can't make any of those things."

"Make 'em yourself," said I. "Why not?" And the woman stared at me as if she thought I had gone crazy.

And yet that woman bothers all her neighbors to death running around and telling them her troubles because she hasn't enough to do to keep her out of mischief.

If I were a man and my wife insisted on having an imitation dinner sent home in a paper bag, as so many women do insist on doing, I'd bring her home a little imitation money to pay for that dinner once in while.

What's happened to all the homemade bread?

How long is it since you ate any homemade sausage? Who bakes the pastry at your house—the cook or the baker?

The plain, disagreeable fact is that the average American woman doesn't know any any more about the real duties of a housekeeper than a pushcart man, and she's too indolent and too indifferent to learn.

Every butcher and grocer shop nowadays has a "home cooking" department, and you can't get within ten feet of the counter without standing in line for your turn.

I stood and watched a line of women buying "home cooked" macaroni and "home cooked" beans and "home cooked" hash and "home cooked" mincemeat the other day till I wondered what on earth was the matter with the modern home and the modern home maker, that all the "home cooking" has to be done in a shop.

Talk about an industrial revolution: Some day the men of this country will rise in a "decent cooking" revolution and then perhaps there'll be some chance of knowing what you are eating at your own table.
